GREETING

A page has been written and sealed
In the book of thy sturdy young life;
Within it thy heart lies revealed,
A strong heart that's girt for the strife.

'Tis a heart that is earnest and true,
That is eager for growth and for fame;
We are proud as we greet thee anew
Of the honor that crowneth thy name.

The future gives promise of worth,
And dear are the years that are past;
But dearest and best since thy birth
To us is this page that is last.

Rapemzel

I read how the Prince rode through the wood
To meet his Princess fair,
Till he came where the high tower held her fast,
And he called through the evening air:

“Rapemzel! Rapemzel!
Let down your hair!”

There’s my lady has hair as long and bright
As gladdened the Prince’s eye,
But methinks no man may scale her tower,
So strong it is built and high.

Stone upon stone of classic lore,
And windows barred that be;
And they’ve double-locked the iron door
With a Phi Beta Kappa key.

Yet I think if her eyes looked kindly down,
The danger I’d freely dare,
Though grimly the Powers should mutter and frown,
If only she smiled on my prayer.

O Princess! My Princess!
Let down your hair!

Faculty Lymericks

A
There once was a man with a craze,
His knowledge of Dutch would amaze;
    He's large and he's tall,
    Ah, he's mighty withal,
And he thinks an "exam" never pays.

B
There is a young Prof. from the Hub
Who considers the freshman a dub;
    He once told us with glee
    His name might be Bruer  y,
This distinguished young sub from the Hub.

C
There is on the faculty now,
A young law to whom co-eds bow.
    This man never tires;
    Our debates he inspires,
And in English no slang he'll allow.

A Woman's Voice

SHOOK him gently by the shoulder. "Jack," I said, "Do you feel well enough to answer the phone? It's some girl's voice. I asked her to leave a message but she said that she must see Mr. Brown."

Groaning, Jack arose, drew on some clothes, and stumbled down stairs to the phone.

Suddenly there was wafted up from below a stream of sulphurous invective that made the pious old negro housekeeper retreat to her room and slam the door. Jack appeared, his face livid:

"Central wanted me to pay her that nickel I owed the phone," he said as he crawled back to bed.

History of the Class of 1904

THE CLASS of '04 is unique in many ways and we, who are about to depart, are justly proud of it. In the first place we have always had college spirit and class spirit—it was not necessary to graft it upon us by means of frantic Senior songs a few months before graduation. We all had it our last year in “prep” school when the mighty football team of '99 won our hearts to our future Alma Mater. So in the Fall of 1900 we tumbled over to Cobb—jumping the excavated sidewalks and holes where trees were wont to be—dusty and enthusiastic. We realized that a new day had dawned for the University of Chicago, and that we were a class about to create precedents. Therefore we at once organized ourselves—the first class to elect officers in the Freshman year—and chose S. F. Fellows, President; Bertha Iles, Vice-President; E. J. Downey, Secretary; F. R. Adams, Treasurer; L. C. Hopkins, Sergeant-at-Arms. Then we were ready to ring up the curtain.

Our first turn was performed by Messrs. Gaylord, Rich and Hopkins, who daringly attached a '04 banner to the flagpole. This floated so serenely for fifteen hours that we became over-confident and, after a brave fight, were forced to see it carried off by '03. We then made ready for our great act, the Freshman-Sophomore football game, and led by Captain Backhouse neatly defeated our opponents—6-0. We now felt that we had struck our pace, but found this to be a mistake when in the Spring the class of '03 won the track meet. The Decennial celebration, however, brightened us up considerably and fitly rounded out our Freshman year.

In October, 1901 we again met and elected as class officers H. W. Ford, President; Walter Johnson, Vice-President; Marie McAvoy, Secretary and Treasurer; William Carey, Sergeant-at-Arms. Now, of course, it was not for a class of our reputation to take the initiative, but when '05 hung a banner on the top of the power house chimney we saw an opportunity to show our marked improvement in field events and, gracefully climbing the chimney, bore down the trophy in triumph. A terrific battle was waged below, but “our little band” gained the spoils. Soon we were again able to show our prowess on the football field by defeating the Freshies with a score of 27-5. In the Spring, we must admit that the track team of '05 finished us with 58 points against 41, but soon after this, Messrs. Lord, Miller and Ford showed our superiority in the matter of brains by winning the Freshman-Sophomore debate.

Upon our return in the Fall of 1902, we felt that great changes were in progress—the hazy promises of our Freshman year were taking on the form of reality. Rush Medical College was a part of us, and we had our own law school—segregation in the junior college was an accomplished fact! A bit overwhelmed by our greatly increased importance we at once selected class officers: Arthur Lord, President; A. T. Stewart, Vice-President; Marie McAvoy, Secretary; Albert W. Sherer, Treasurer; C. A. Leland, Sergeant-at-Arms—and set out to help things grow.

Our last two years have been an uninterrupted series of realized hopes and ambitions. We have seen our campus spread from Cottage Grove to Madison Avenue, from Fifty-sixth Street south of the Midway. We have seen completed the School of Education and the University High School, Hitchcock, Mandel and Hutchinson Halls, the law building and best of all an unequaled gymnasium. It would seem that we have done all that could be expected of a single class, but if there are any wild dreams still unrealized we leave with the hope that they may be accomplished as fully as ours have been.

The Class of 1905

BLANCHE FELT

J. L. BRODÉ

E. E. QUANTRELL

HERALDED only by the splendid athletic material it contained, the Class of '05 came into the University with little demonstration. Following the example of other classes it soon effected an organization, choosing as its officers: Clark Jennison, President; Frank Lovell, Vice-President; Fred Speik, Treasurer; Miss Ruth Reddy, Secretary. Having thus launched itself into its new political environment, '05 quietly prepared for a bold "coup," which was to leave an indelible imprint on the records of college spirit. On Hallowe'en the plot was ripe. Members of '04 awoke with dismay the following morning to find a Freshman class flag suspended from the top of the power plant chimney. In the fierce class rush that followed—the fiercest and bloodiest in Chicago's history—the Sophomores finally succeeded in getting away with the emblem; all torn to pieces it is true, for they found it necessary to divide it up into many parts. In athletic competition the two classes broke even. The Sophs won the inter-class football game by a score of 27 to 5, although in all fairness to the '05 team it must be remarked that ten Freshmen were at the training table and were thus disqualified, whereas the same was true of only two Sophs.

The dual track meet resulted with a score of 58 to 41, in favor of '05, thus recompensing the Freshmen for their defeat in football.

Under the encouragement of Mr. Chandler the class organized a "Freshman Debating Club," and the complete success of the experiment has been attested by its continuation in the case of both succeeding classes.

Recognizing the new demands made upon it in the more dignified station of the "Sophomore Class," '05 promptly re-assembled on its return in the fall of '02 and chose as officers: Mortimer Cahill, President; Fred Speik, Vice-President; Miss Corinne Campbell, Secretary, and Logan Gridley, Treasurer. In the face of great odds which the Freshmen were willing to give, the Sophomores played them a tie game in football, and regretfully "took their money." The inter-class track meet, which was held in the Spring, resulted in a victory for the Sophomores, the score standing 59 to 58.

The class of '06, soon after its entrance into the University, under the cover of darkness, bravely decorated the campus walks with the implied challenge: "'05 Beware '06." As a reminder of their inferior condition, the Sophomores posted rules of behavior for the enlightenment of the "green and verdant Freshmen," and nothing more was heard from them.

The debating club, reorganized under the name, "Sophomore Debating Club," challenged the Freshmen Club and defeated it in a joint debate, held December 15.

The Junior Class, '05 has the football and track captaincies, two members of the 'Varsity debating team and strong representation on the boards of the daily and monthly Maroon. Its officers are: Julian L. Brodé, President; Dudley Bard, Vice-President; Miss Blanche Felt, Secretary, and Ernest Quantrell, Treasurer. With the brightest of prospects and on the strength of three years' experience, '05 looks forward with confident hope to her closing year.

BLIND

HELLO, Farley! Now don't say that you're sorry; I know that you are. Talk man! Find something to say! I'll go mad if you act like all the others. All morning they've been coming up, trooping up through the blackness, some of them people that I haven't seen, well, for years. All morning I've been groping around in the dark for their hands and smiling, and cussing them under my breath; though of course I know that it's decent in them to come, and foolish in me to —. Say! You know, it is going to be interesting, psychologically I mean, to be blind this way; for a time. Now all these relatives and acquaintances who have been in here to visit me since it happened, it seems as if I knew them much better than before. I have been thinking about them since they left, and really I believe that I never understood them properly before, that is, most of them. An aunt, for instance, in whom I have always had confidence, spoke to me about my religion—to me, Farley. Isn't it sickening? O, of course, it's all right—and she meant—but then—I have a way of embarrassing people, I think; they were all worried to death this morning about what to say; I could feel it and it embarrassed me. One little cousin, a girl of about fifteen, came in on tiptoe to the foot of the bed—never said a word, but just started crying as if her dear, silly heart would break. It made me redden up and feel darned foolish, but I liked it. Farley, it's no use trying to forget it in 'vain words,' this is a 'bad business,' I have absolutely lost both eyes, you know—burned right out. No, they don't hurt now any more. I suppose since I am young and strong that I will live a long time. Do you think so? Yes, you're right! What is the use talking about it?

"Tell me, is this room large or small? Last night tossing around in bed I came to feel that it was no more than a cubby-hole. It seemed that the walls were creeping in closer and closer until I was actually choking for imaginary lack of air. I think it was Poe who put that devilish idea into my head. Then again this bed was in the center of a vast hall; I could feel the gray distances on every side. Half asleep I came to imagine that a multitude of white figures stepped silently by me, each figure as it passed lifting its cowl a moment and looking on me with dark, sad eyes.

"Yes, this is going to be interesting, psychologically, but not for very long. I don't feel really well balanced now. I will note down my sensations; I mean I will remember them, and some day—yes, some day, what? The worst of it is that there will never be a 'some day.' Well! . . . Talking about noting down sensations, do you remember that thin, solemn fellow down at that strange, dirty café under the elevated, who would take out his little notebook when he was full of beer and put down just what he felt; entries like this: 'Sixth stein, head does not belong to feet.' Have you been to that place lately? No, that's so! how could you? I've only been—blind a day. How many centuries more will it last? That depends on me, doesn't it? All on me! There is a good deal of consolation in that. Yes, I mean just what I say, Farley. No, I am not a damned fool, and you know it. Talk squarely with me, for Heaven's sake; that's partly why I wanted you to come.

"I'll tell you how it happened. It was after five o'clock and the laboratory was empty except for me and another fellow puttering away, down at the end of the room. You know the experiment I was doing. Well, I guess I was careless in heating, for suddenly a little stream of water ran up into the bulb. The whole thing burst right under my face. I saw silver and red lines of the molten stuff spitting up at me—and then I was staggering around the faucet trying to mop the fire out of my eyes. I heard some one running up over the wooden floor, swearing with sympathy, and his voice sounded far away. Well, Farley, they are going to put you out in a minute, and so I must tell you quickly why I wanted especially to see you. You remember that once in one of our long talks we decided that any man would commit murder under certain circumstances—or suicide. Do you remember? We were right, Farley! Good-bye."

Over the Billiard Table

SCENE—A well appointed private billiard room in a summer cottage.

DICK HOLLISTER (discovered seated on the rail of the billiard table)—Beth certainly has a case on young Catherwood. I'm sure she's been trying to corner me all day to sing his praises in my ears; I'm, in for it now, I guess, unless I feign an intense interest in the game.

BETH HOLLISTER, Dick's sister, (entering timidly)—Oh, Dick, I'm so glad you're here. Harold so admires the girls who play billiards and do other clever things that I don't. You'll teach me the game, won't you, Dickie? I asked Harold to teach me yesterday and he seemed awfully abashed.

DICK (seemingly absorbed in the preparations for the game)—You took your cue rather poorly.

BETH—Why, Dick, I asked him at the most opportune moment. Are we ready now?

DICK—Yes, you lag.

BETH—Perhaps I do but it isn't my fault if I am slow. Oh, you mean we roll the balls down to the end of the table to see who plays first. Is it my turn?

DICK—Yes, but do be careful about your English.

BETH—I'm sure I talk as correctly as you do, Dick Hollister. Harold says I'm a regular jurist.

DICK (studying the table as usual)—You ought to play for position there.

BETH—Why, you know that Harold hasn't a penny in his own name and anyway a girl has no right to be interested in a man just because of his social standing.

DICK (after Beth has made a series of ineffectual shots)—But you mustn't keep on babying it along that way and trying to play safe. You'll never win that way.

BETH (more indignantly)—Baby it along! I didn't encourage Harold in the least, and it's perfectly horrid of you to speak of winning him when I've only been with him alone half a dozen times, and then only to row across the inlet to the pavillion.

DICK (after Beth has made an awkward shot from the end of the table)—Why didn't you use the bridge. That placed you in rather an awkward position.

BETH—You know that every one else rows over to the pavillion hops and it's just as bad to drive around by the bridge way, though we did go that way once to see the upper stream by moonlight.

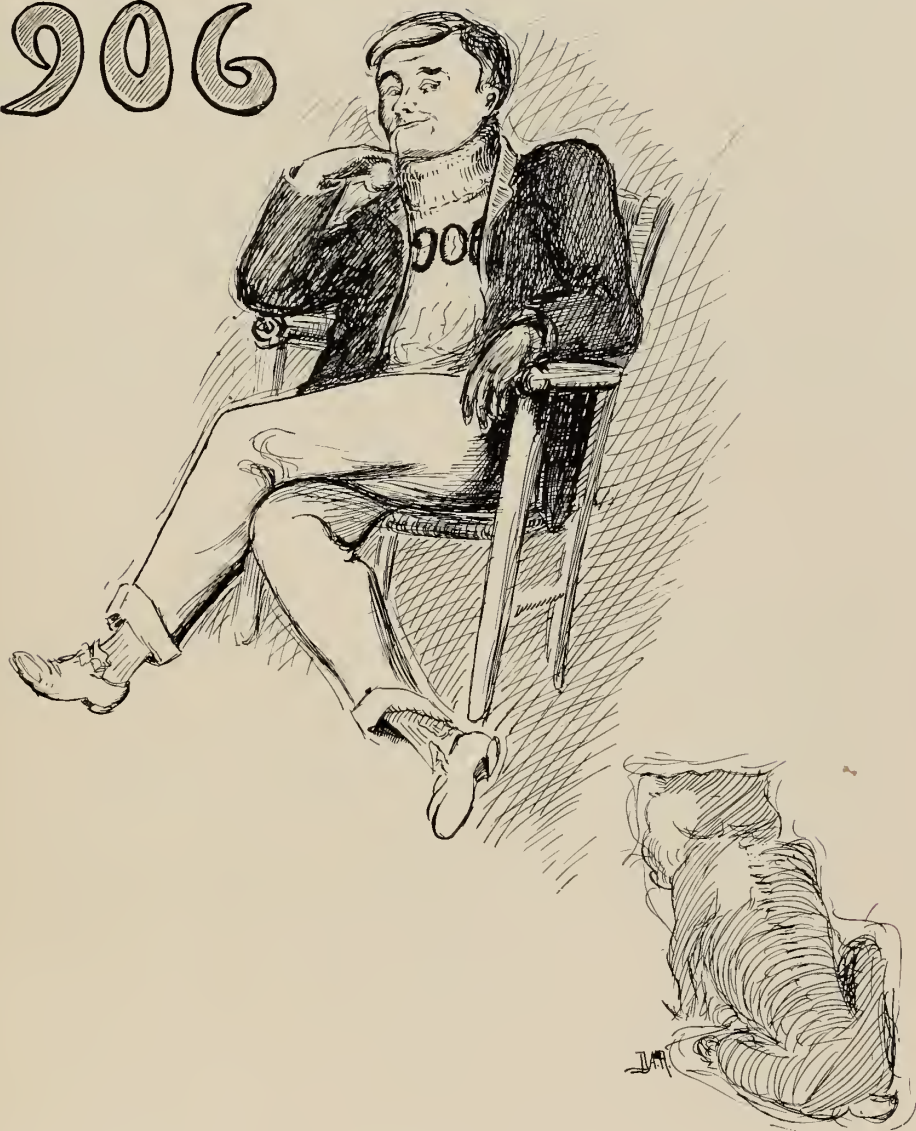

DICK (as Beth misses an easy shot at one side of the table)—Too near together at the rail. There, I thought you'd kiss.

BETH (dropping her cue)—Why, Dick Hollister! You're perfectly horrid. We weren't out of the buck-board once and there is no railing on the upper bridge and Harold Catherwood is too much of a gentleman to —, but I don't think I care for billiards today, I'm going down to mamma's room. (Exit haughtily.)

DICK (after a burst of half-subdued laughter)—I may have played foul, but until Sis learns billiards I'll be able to discount her stories of young Catherwood, and it's her next shot.

Curtain.

Sophomore Class History

EVERYONE said we were a promising class, so we took their word for it and began to say it ourselves. When, however, we said it to the class of '05 in so many words, they were resentful, but since they thought that resentment was all they were called upon to express, nothing happened. But we appreciate their position, now that we are sophomores, and realize how vain is all wordly contention. We think it best to ignore the Freshmen completely, and thus effectually and safely demonstrate our superiority. We organized early in October of 1902 with Barrett Andrews as President, Mark Catlin, Vice-President; Lillian Stephenson, Secretary, and Hubert Ellsworth as Treasurer. At the reorganization this year we chose Walter McPherson as President; Tom Harsha, Vice-President; Grace Williamson, Secretary, and Hunt. Henry Treasurer.

In athletics our class has an excellent record. On the football field, as Freshmen we proved almost invincible, tying every game but one. Some said this was pre-arranged, others that the team could not play well enough to score, but as these people were all acknowledged knockers no one paid any attention to them. The team was fine! Seven of our number also were on the 'Varsity squad, Maxwell, Catlin, Ivison, Wightman, Tripp, Bezdek and Schnur, and with the exception of such men as Magee, Blair, Cahill, Speik and one or two others, the track team was composed entirely of '06 men. Although there were some unpleasant remarks about our football team last year, the Freshmen were the only ones to complain of it this year. Much to their chagrin, the Sophomores, captained by Cyrus Garnett, "jumped on them real hard." At first the Freshmen, on account of their superior team play, had the advantage, but as soon as the Sophomores took the ball there was a decided reversal of form. We pushed them back steadily; then on an exchange of punts obtained a free kick. Garnett kicked goal easily from the twenty-five yard line. After another march down the field with Mefford, Garnett and Harper carrying the ball, Garnett made a touch-down on a four-yard line buck. The game ended soon afterward with the score eleven to nothing. The next meeting of the classes was in the track event, but we will pass this over with as few words as possible, since in the minds of the great majority we are sure, things did not go as pleasantly as was hoped. The Freshmen won by the close score of  $46\frac{1}{2}$  to  $39\frac{1}{2}$ .

In a social way the Score Club has been upholding the honor of the class. No one who attended it will ever forget the first Score Club informal of this year. Some one, desirous of pushing a good thing along, deprived the band of its sand-paper and used it on the floor. The musicians in retaliation purloined the wax and used it on their mustaches. There seemed to be a slight hitch somewhere and some thought it was the fault of the floor. Others said so outright, but as the management promised faithfully to do better next time, everyone overlooked the past and came again. They did not regret it.

We have a strong representation on the Glee and Mandolin Club and also on the Daily and Monthly Maroons.

DREAMLAND

O, the land of dreams and visions, far beyond the western skies,
Far beyond the distant hill-tops whence the shades of evening rise,
Land of visionary fancies, bathed in sunset's softest glow,
Where the elfins hold their courtships, where the fairies come and go;
Where each breeze is sweetest music, chasing every care away—
Take me to the shores of dreamland—I am weary of the day.

Take me to the far-off dreamland, fairies they will lead the way
To the rare enchanted regions where the zephyrs dance and play.
Land where lovers loiter slowly in the tranquil evening shade;
Land where Summer ever lingers, where the flowers never fade,
Where the laugh of purling waters charms the evening into night,
While the moon in mystic stillness drapes the hills with fairy light.

O, the land of dreams and visions, far beyond the western skies,
Nearer, ever nearer stealing, when the sun in splendor dies.
Pictured in the glowing embers when the winter's fire is low,
Loved in childhood's happy hours, in the days of long ago;
Take me to those golden regions of enchantment far away,
Take me to the shores of dreamland, I am weary of the day.

The Wail of the South Wind

I know an iceberg that's at rest
Upon a troubled sea;
No flame of love burns in her breast,
No passion's heat has she.

There is an errant south wind seeks
Her lover true to be;
But when he tries to kiss her cheek
She spurns him icily.

The berg was once a careless wave;
Who loved this wind so free,
And when he would caress her then
She'd greet him lovingly.

The wave and south wind quarreled one day,
She cried: "We'll ne'er agree;"
Then tossed her head and rode away
Across the boundless sea.

The south wind strove to hold her—
Cried: "Come back, girl, I pray!"
But the wave, e'er growing colder,
Kept drifting on her way.

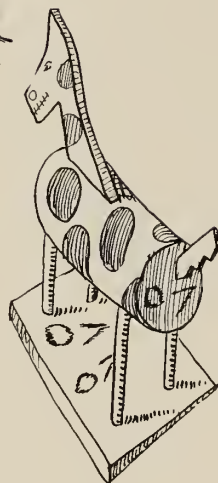

As months and years slipped gently by
She wandered o'er the sea,
While searching for that frigid land
The south winds seldom see.

She's found it now—she's reached her goal,
Her wish is gratified;
The warm south wind who worshipped her
Falls frozen at her side.

L'Envoi

The troubled sea is life, proud girl;
The berg, cold and free,
Is you, my darling Gertrude.
The "spurned south wind" means me.

ELEANOR HALL

GEORGE SHORT

WE came here in the autumn of 1903. Yes, the first of October found the University campus thronged with merry students, not the least auspicious of whom were the incoming Freshmen. The class did not furnish the Sophomores a very verdant pasture on which to browse, for the identification cards offered by sinister-looking Sophomores at half a dollar soon fell to a quarter, and finally went begging at a nickel without finding any purchasers. Early in the month we had a class meeting and elected Hooper Pegues temporary Chairman and Eleanor Hall temporary Secretary. Two weeks later another meeting was held. The Sophomores attempted to disturb the serenity of the occasion only to be hustled unceremoniously through the door. On account of the confusion created it was decided best to ballot again on the three candidates who had received the greatest number of votes. A week later in Mandel Hall we chose Hooper Pegues, President; Elisabeth Rankin, Vice-President; Eleanor Hall, Secretary, and George Short, Treasurer. From this meeting some of the more belligerent Freshmen swaggered over to Kent where the Sophomores were holding their election. We were met at the door by Dean Vincent. Shortly after this posters were everywhere visible, graphically depicting this terrible meeting of '06 and '07. In the meantime the football season was progressing very satisfactorily. A well organized Freshman team under the guidance of Coach Harper and leadership of Captain Mabin was playing the most elaborate schedule that had ever been prepared for a Freshman eleven. Aside from playing a number of games with neighboring teams we defeated Illinois, '07 by a score of 17 to 0. The Saturday following, however, the tables were turned and Wisconsin, '07 defeated us at Madison by the same score. Then came the Freshman-Sophomore game. It was a miserable day, raw and cold, and it seemed to get rawer and colder as the game progressed. Several groups of girls, flaunting '07 banners, huddled together and watched it grow colder. For the sake of those who don't know,—the score was 11 to 0. In the evening of the same day the two teams and a number of Junior College students enjoyed the performance of "Mr. Bluebeard" at the ill-fated Iroquois Theatre. On the 'Varsity eleven three of our class, "Bubbles" Hill, Eckersall and Nordenholt, did valiant service, and were rewarded with a "C." The class of '07 has been well represented in all college activities. The rolls of the Glee and Mandolin Clubs are plentifully besprinkled with Naughty-Seven men. Five Freshmen have been successful in making the Dramatic Club and we have our full quota of men on the staff of the Daily Maroon. Then there is the Freshman Debating Club which meets every other Tuesday and discusses important questions of the day. This has been a particularly successful year for the track team, many members of which are Sophomores—but much to the surprise of everyone we won the Freshman-Sophomore meet. Early in the evening '06 gained a lead but '07 fought gamely and when the Relay was announced the score stood  $41\frac{1}{3}$  to  $39\frac{2}{3}$  in favor of '07. The Freshman relay team, Mabin, Jayne, Eckersall and Captain Lightbody lead all the way, and when the excitement subsided the score stood '07— $46\frac{1}{3}$ ; '06— $39\frac{2}{3}$ . But it is not alone for victory over '06 we yearn. Such a victory is not nearly so dear to us as when the old Maroon of Chicago waves triumphantly over her rivals. May the spirit of '07 ever be "For Chicago I Will."

The Man in the Upper Berth

"Come to prom three-thirty P. M. February twelfth; have asked Lucy," read the telegram.

Wasn't Bob a trump! But to wait so late! Well, that was always the way with brothers. They think it doesn't matter, if it's a sister. I supposed he would give me to his room-mate to entertain, if he had Lucy. Bob had never told me much about "Barney," except that he was also called "Beaut," because he was anything but beautiful, and that wasn't very definite information. But it was a Cornell "prom," so every misgiving must be put aside. It was then 10:30 P. M. of the eleventh, and no time to lose. Every girl in the corridor came loyally to the rescue, each begging me to wear her belt buckle or her new opera cloak or something she highly prized; one zealous Freshman even scented all my handkerchiefs till one must have thought I was an agent for a perfume establishment.

After much bustling about, nearly missing the train, and completely losing track of my precious trunk, I boarded the 2 A. M. train west from Albany. Everything went wrong, and to cap the climax, I could not obtain a berth at any price. Fortunately, a gentleman got off at a little town and I procured his berth. The berth was a "lower," and the "upper" of the section was evidently occupied by a man, which it wouldn't have taken a Sherlock Holmes to discover, by the numerous articles of apparel which swung about with every jolt of the car, endangering, to say the least, the condition of one's hair and eyes. I climbed in quickly, forgetting, in blissful sleep, every worldly circumstance, and dreaming of the week to come.

When I awoke, the dim, seven o'clock, winter sun gave just enough light for me to distinguish two—two, yes, they were legs, dangling over the edge of the ceiling and writhing about in contortions only excusable in an attempt to dress in an upper berth. I was startled first, then fascinated as to what the outcome of it all would be. Presently, up went one of my visitors, and, after breathless suspense, I saw it reappear wrapped in a red sock. Instantly the other vanished to return to its mate equally embellished. Then one boot and the other made their appearance. I watched all, in tense but fearful interest, not knowing whether to stay or fly, and too fascinated to utter a sound. Then both at once went up and, after an interminable absence, during which the car wheels seemed to whirl almost gaily as if gaining great fun out of my predicament, down they came prepared for their entrance into the outside world!

I thought my time had come! The man in the upper berth evidently did not know that the Albany passenger had had a successor, and would unsuspectingly clamber down inside the curtain by a step on the arm of the car seat and thence to the floor. I awoke for the first time to the realization that I must do, and do quickly, or die. I threw aside the coverlid under which I had been cowering, sat upright, discovered the bell and frantically rang for the porter. It seemed years till the big, burly head appeared between the curtains.

"What is it, Miss?" he drawled.

"Kindly inform the gentleman in the upper berth that the lower berth is occupied."

I tried to speak severely but my voice shook so that it was anything but commanding. The porter vanished and I heard him rumble out, "Thar's a ledly down stars, sah." Up went those legs quicker than a Jack-in-the-box, and I breathed freely once more. I heard the man in the upper berth descend quite decorously, by the ladder outside.

I wriggled thoughtfully into my clothes, gave an inefficient brush to my hair, and having quite regained my composure, got out into the aisle. Everyone knows how fresh and well-groomed one looks after dressing in a berth. I felt as if I had not been put together exactly right in the first place. On that account I suppose I was smiling rather consciously. I looked up, and in the only section of the car "made up," sat a gentleman who looked down as quickly as I did. I rushed up the car, regardless of physical injury and almost devoid of dignity, to the dressing room, where, after struggling against the rocking of the car and the consequent rocking of a half dozen other unfortunate women in my own state, I improved in a degree my appearance, and partially regained my self-respect.

It took some minutes to screw my courage to return to the berth, but when I did return I was fully prepared to meet its occupant without a tremor. I sat down, calmly opened my suit case, took out a book (one of my donations) and started to read. It was some time before I dared make a survey of the enemy's position, though I knew he was well assured of every article of my equipment, for all the while I was reading I could feel his eyes just burning through my book that I had raised for a rampart. I did dare, finally. He was young, I knew by his pigeon-toed low shoes perched on the radiator under the window. His newspaper completely hid his head, but I noticed the hand that held the paper. It was long and knotty, not very prepossessing; on the little finger he wore a fraternity ring. I suppose all college girls are interested in fraternity rings. I was, at any rate, and this one seemed familiar to me, though I could not make out the letters. His suit case protruded from under the curtains of the section opposite, and reading upside-down, I finally made out, W. B., Springfield, Mass. I tried to return to my book, and appear interested, for I was in terror of his glancing up and discovering my curiosity, but that W. B., Springfield, Mass., kept haunting me. It seemed to convey something familiar, but the something was just outside my brain knocking to get in, and I could not force the door. Gradually, I became absorbed in my book and when I looked up again people were passing in to breakfast, W. B. evidently having gone also.

"Second call for breakfast," bawled a porter.

I struggled up the car toward the diner. A porter drew back a chair for me and I settled into it, thankful to have ended a perilous journey, when, whom should I see opposite me but the Man in the Upper Berth. We both squared our shoulders and looked grimly out of the window. I hope he had to struggle as hard as I did to keep back a smile. At any rate, he did not succeed. Mystery lends enchantment; the spell was broken. The handsome knights are always behind newspapers in this world. In that brief moment I saw that he had a protruding forehead, divided off by little stray ropes of red hair, one of which wandered down over one eye, giving a peculiar squint to his expression. He wore glasses, the bow kind, set up on a very jaunty pug nose, so that one was not at all surprised to see just a trace of a grin resting on the thin lips. He had freckles. All this I pictured in the flying scenery. Yet there was something grave and sweet in that altogether comical face that made me ashamed of having noticed the freckles and red hair.

"What'll you have, sah?" interrupted the porter.

The order given, the waiter glanced at me inquiringly and, before I could decide, shambled off, swinging his tray. I was a little piqued at his not taking my order, but he was gone and there was nothing to be done. The funny side of the whole situation appealed to me strongly and I had to fight hard to look composed and unconcerned. A fat little man with a pudgy face and perpetual simpering smile, watched us furtively. I think he thought it was "Our First Quarrel."

Presently the waiter returned bearing a tray full of covered dishes, from which the steam escaped in tantalizing little whiffs. First he set down a fine brown steak; I wondered at its size. Then two cups of coffee! I realized with sudden horror that the breakfast was for two!

“Anything else, sah,” asked the waiter, including me in his questioning glance.

“Nothing,” said my Vis-a-vis.

He carved the steak slowly, put it on a plate and asked, solemnly:

“Will you have gravy, Madame?”

I answered in the affirmative, and my brain was in a tumult; I didn’t know which way to turn. I wanted to fly back to the other coach, but appreciation of his perfect courtesy and perhaps the odor of the steak, also, restrained me. I hit on a plan. After hastily swallowing a few morsels, all the while determinedly facing the window, I arose, found the porter at the end of the car, paid half the bill and retired to my section, where I gave way to the laughter that had been almost stifling me for the last half-hour. I saw that funny pug nose, those quizzical eyes and compressed lips, and knew that a laugh lay just behind, which he dared not allow to escape, but could not entirely conquer.

When W. B., Springfield, returned I was deep in my book in my own section, which was now made up. Of course he had a right, indeed, necessity compelled him to sit there, too. I heard him throw himself into the opposite seat and take up his newspaper. When the conductor came through he said, “Ithaca?” We both nodded. Then he was going to Cornell!

All at once a conviction came to me that I could not put aside, though there was so little foundation for believing it. W. B. was “Barney!” “Beaut!” I knew “Barney” was from the East, and here was “Mass.” on his suit case. What would Bob say! The train, after what seemed an endless morning, dragged into Ithaca. Bob was in the car before it stopped—the same, dear old Bob, and how glad I was to see him!

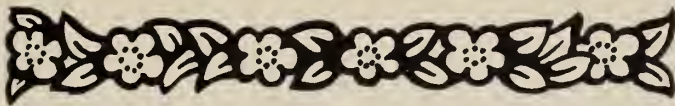

“Hello, Sis! This is great! Glad you could come, by George! Barney, too! Where on earth did you hail from? Where you been all night? The fellows are nearly wild. Thought you’d skipped the ‘week’ and left me at the mercy of the two girls!” pelted Bob, laughing, kissing me, and slapping his room-mate on the shoulder in breathless nonchalance. Then:

“Where’d you meet my sister?” wonderingly.

Barney blushed to the roots of his hair. His little grey eyes looked straight into mine, and the smile there gave them a comical yet grave little twinkle as he said in a low voice:

“In Ithaca.”

We shook hands then, muttering something about its being all right now. I owe the memories of a delightful Junior week to “Beaut,” the Man in the Upper Berth.

DRAMATIC CLUB

History of the Dramatic Club

THE University of Chicago Dramatic Club dates its organization from the Spring of 1895. On Academic Day, in June, 1894, a sketch entitled "The New Cosmogony," was given in Kent. The following year the name "Academic Day" was changed to "Junior Day," and since that time the practice of giving a performance annually on that date has become one of the traditions of the Dramatic Club. In the Spring of 1903 the Dramatic Club, with the co-operation of the Public Speaking Department, gave a Junior Day performance at Powers' Theatre. The three one-act plays were prepared in a few weeks, but limited time for rehearsals gave the members of the cast unlimited enthusiasm, and the result was an excellent performance. In the Autumn quarter two plays were given in Mandel Hall, "The Duenna" and

"The Land of Heart's Desire." On January 4th the latter play was repeated at the Reynolds Club Theatre in honor of the author, Mr. William Butler Yeats. The artistic little theatre was filled with invited guests of the Club, the members of the Faculty and their families. Mr. Yeats responded graciously to the call for a speech, and after complimenting the cast, gave an interesting address regarding his views on dramatic presentation.

The Dramatic Club has during the past year instituted a new feature, that of having regular social meetings where individual stunts, impromptu plays and other characteristic entertainments are given. By this means it is hoped that all latent talent will be brought forth. The first banquet of the Dramatic Club was given May 6th at the Stratford Hotel. Among the thirty guests present there were seven ex-presidents of the Club.

THE Spring of 1900 saw the last of student comic opera at the University of Chicago and that was so long ago that there are very few undergraduates left whose college experience includes a memory of "The Academic Alchemist."

Some few of those who did take a hand in the old-time opera got together early in the winter quarter, in conjunction with a group of congenial spirits, numbering thirteen in all, for the express purpose of organizing a comic opera club. The result of their meeting was "The Blackfriars" (written, as you will notice, in one word). The chief object of "The Blackfriars" is to present once a year something more or less clever and more or less musical. The other and less public object of the organization is to bring together more closely the men of the University who are trying to learn to sing, act, draw or write and to give them the opportunity of sharing their ideas with others.

"The Blackfriars" will, for the first time, stand before the public for inspection probably on Friday and Saturday, May 28 and 29.

 HE Canadian Club is composed of students, instructors and officials of the University who are of British birth or parentage. Its objects are to bring its members into social contact and to fittingly observe Canadian national holidays and events. It has a membership of about sixty, nearly all of whom are in the graduate schools. All the Canadian universities are represented and all the Provinces of Canada. Several members of Canada are native-born English or Scotch.

University Settlement

SOCIAL settlement, Canon Barnet has likened to a bridge which is level, over which common level, men may pass in both directions. The comings and goings across our University bridge have heretofore been in but one direction, viz: from the University to the Settlement. These efforts have been spasmodic and lacking in coördination. The bridge has lacked a signal station. With this need well in view a group of comers and goers and many others interested in this special traffic met in the parlors of Foster Hall January 23, 1904.

Representatives from the Woman's Union, the Young Women Students' League, the Y. M. C. A. and the Halls organized themselves on this occasion into the Settlement Association of Joint Committees, a title abbreviated for convenience into the Settlement Association. This body is representative rather than executive. Its special functions are to arrange for the various student activities at the University Settlement; to preserve the continuity of the work from quarter to quarter; to cooperate with the Settlement League in all their activities; and to arrange for Settlement Club activities at the University. To facilitate these ends, an office in the Christian Union Room, Cobb Hall, 1A, has, through the courtesy of the University Chaplain, Dr. Henderson, been extended the Association. Here twice a week there are held regular office hours. Just now the furnishings of the office are significant; a card catalogue and a chart of student activities; a plan of the Settlement House now in process of erection; a bulletin board and magazine box for Settlement purposes. The officers of the Association for this year are President, Louise Warren; Secretary, Lucy Rebecca Watkins; Executive Committee, Henrietta Becker, Mrs. Emma M. Henderson, Bernard I. Bell. The meetings are monthly, Monday at 2 P. M. being the present hour.

And thus has our University bridge been provided with a signal station. That the flag flies and the lookout is clear will be seen from the fact that the traffic across the bridge is now open in both directions. On several occasions the Clubs of the University Settlement have come to the help of the University. When Mr. Graham Taylor delivered his address on the Relation of the Settlement to the University in England and in America before the Settlement Association, the Young Peoples' Chorus from the Settlement contributed the music. The Woman's Club, the Bohemian Woman's Club and the Young Woman's Club and Settlement Residents were also present. On another occasion Miss Suter, walking delegate of the Woman's Union of Stockyard Workers, was invited to address the members of the Woman's Union of the University.

The Woman's Union

THE annual meeting of the Woman's Union was held on January 20, 1904. The constitution was amended by changing the number of vice-presidents from two to three, and by making the president of the Woman's Athletic Association and the secretary of the Women Students' Christian League members of the Council. The following were elected officers for the year 1904: President, Miss Marion Talbot; Vice-Presidents, Miss A. E. Allen, Miss L. D. Harris, Miss Verna Moyer; Secretary, Miss Ethel Jaynes; Treasurer, Miss Anne H. Martin. Chairmen of Committees: House, Miss Gertrude Dudley; Membership, Miss S. P. Breckinridge; Entertainment, Miss A. S. Thompson; Music, Miss L. G. Larrabee; Philanthropic, Miss H. K. Becker; Hospitality, Miss H. D. Woods; Lunch Room, Miss L. L. Just.

The report of the Secretary, Miss Jaynes, was in part as follows: The Union is now starting on its third year. We have moved from the cozy, but somewhat cramped quarters in the little church, to our rooms in Lexington Hall, where with the reception rooms, and the use of the lunch room and library, we are able to attempt what before was impossible. When the lunch room was opened to all women of the University, that feature was no longer a chief function, and the Union could therefore give its attention more fully to distinctively representative affairs. What were these to be? This question made us turn to the very foundation of our organization to see why we existed; for, although the place of the Union in the varied activities of University life was gradually being defined, yet there was, and is, need for very careful adjustment. Thus far there seem to have been three general needs: (1) It was necessary, with so large a membership, that there be opportunity given for members to come to know one another, and hence the affairs simply for members. (2) Situated as we are in a great city, we have advantages for a much broader experience than just that of the life at the University, but such advantages must come most successfully through some organization, and the Union has endeavored through its Philanthropy Committee to offer these opportunities. (3) There has long been felt a lack in the life of students at our University, because, as a general thing, it was possible at best to have simply casual acquaintance with instructors and their families, and hence was lost that something that comes from personal association which is the heritage of the students of smaller or older colleges. How these needs have been dealt with the reports of the various committees will show.

The summary of the report of the Treasurer, Miss Hardy, was as follows:

Receipts . . . . .	$962.73
Disbursements . . . . .	821.99
Balance on Hand . . . . .	$140 74

The summary of the Lunch Room report, presented by the Bursar, Miss Johnson, was as follows:

Receipts . . . . .	$2,346.69
Disbursements . . . . .	2,185.46
Balance on hand . . . . .	$ 161.23

The report of the Chairman of the House Committee, Miss Dudley, was in part as follows: Through the energy of our President and the Chairman of the Membership Committee, the University and friends of the University became interested in the Union, and sufficient money was contributed to furnish the room in part. During the year the Council has at various times voted money for furnishings; the casts, table linen, chairs, and ferns were purchased with these funds. From the beginning the room has been supplied with the daily papers and the monthly magazines, and the desk furnished with stationery. The room has been open the whole of each college day, and tea always served at four o'clock.

The Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, Miss Chamberlain, reported programs arranged for social afternoons, and opportunities provided for the members to meet distinguished visitors to the city and to the University.

The Chairman of the Music Committee, Miss Jameson, reported musical program arranged, and college songs printed and distributed.

The work of the Philanthropic Committee was reported by Miss Becker, as follows:

(1) Settlement Work—Assistance rendered in giving instruction and entertainment at the Settlement. Membership in this sub-committee carries with it membership in the Settlement Conference. (2) Art Committee—Its object is the stimulation of the æsthetic interests in the Union. About twenty-five members were enrolled, and visits to galleries and studios, and addresses by artists and art critics, were arranged. Miss Becker was made a delegate to the Municipal Art League of Chicago. (3) Committees for Visiting the Sick—Help has been given in cases of illness and distress among the women of the University. (4) Committee on Consumers' League—An exhibit of Consumers' League products was given in the Union rooms, and addresses were made for the purpose of arousing interest in the methods proposed for the protection of women and children engaged in factory and shop work.

The Chairman of the Membership Committee, Miss Breckinridge, reported the membership as follows:

BECAUSE the former Catholic Club of the University was found to be inadequate in many ways for the greatest good of its members, the officers of that organization decided last Fall to reorganize and take a different name. The Catholic Club had been established in the Summer of 1902 for the purpose of entertaining His Grace, Archbishop Spalding of Peoria, Illinois, who was then the University Visiting Speaker. Having served its first object, those interested decided to continue the Club as a social organization for the benefit of the Catholics in the University. A number of details, necessary for the successful furtherence of a social club, had, however, been overlooked in the forming of the Catholic Club, so the officers called a meeting for January 16, 1904, for the purpose of re-establishment on a firmer basis.

The meeting was most successful in every way. A new organization, The Brownson Club, was founded and named after the great Catholic American philosopher. The active membership now numbers about seventy-five. Alumni, Faculty members and people outside the University, who are interested, are eligible for membership as well as resident students.

Above are the officers elected on January 16, to serve during the present year.

The Daily Maroon

THE Daily Maroon is now recording its second year of publication. The first year of the paper's appearance was taken by many to be a test period, especially in consideration of the failure of several previous attempts to establish a student daily. It now seems certain that the University, like seventeen other educational institutions, will continue to have its undergraduate life represented and aided by a daily student publication. During the current year The Daily Maroon has adhered in a general way to the broad lines which Herbert E. Fleming and the original board of editors last year marked out for its growth. The editorial direction of the paper has been in charge of the men who were chosen at the annual election of the board in June, 1903, and others who have later been promoted. Oliver B. Wyman, Managing Editor; Harry W. Ford, News Editor, and Walter L. Gregory, Athletic Editor, as executive editors, have supervised the gathering of news and selection of the quality of reading matter which has appeared in the paper's columns.

The purpose of The Daily Maroon has been primarily to provide the University community with an adequate student organ of publicity. A refined reportorial system has been adopted and a careful attempt is made to cover every department and field of the University that all the news obtainable may be presented to the paper's constituency. On the submission for publication of facts of interest an endeavor is made to publish such facts in a fair way. The Daily Maroon firmly believes in the policy that the encouragement of student activities is one of the chief functions of a college paper, and with the purpose of making Chicago's daily a material factor in aiding in the perfection of undergraduate undertakings the editors have given unlimited space to every sort of student interest. In publishing such items, however, a well drawn distinction has been made between running straight news stories and "boosting." The tendency to "boost" has been carefully stamped out. No greater evil, it was thought by The Daily Maroon, could befall student life than the absence of a medium which, though ready, willing and indeed anxious to see only good in the manner of carrying on undergraduate undertakings still did not hesitate to point out errors in plan and accomplishment which are militating against the most efficient growth of such activities. By pursuing a policy of unhesitatingly pointing out ill advised efforts the paper has fostered the best traditions in student life in a wholesome and far reaching manner.

The competitive basis on which The Daily Maroon is dependent for its right to recognition as a student activity has been the foundation for the selection of members of the board and staff throughout the year. "Work Done" is the test which is decisive in determining the order of promotion. The business management of the paper during the year has been in the hands of Julian L. Brodé. The financing of a proposition involving receipts and expenditures amounting to $24,000 was far larger than the organizers of The Daily Maroon contemplated, but such a proposition the paper has proved to be. A keen insight into the solicitation of advertising has given Mr. Brodé a firm hold on the publication's financial necessities.

Throughout the year the University, by its liberal subscription to the Daily Maroon, has materially encouraged the work of publication. Under the University's direction some four hundred copies of the paper are regularly sent to prominent preparatory schools throughout the country.

The Reynolds Club

HE Reynolds Club opened its doors to members at the beginning of the Autumn Quarter, 1903. All parts of the Club were not then ready for occupancy, much of the furniture not having been installed at that time. The billiard room and library on the first floor were opened, however, with the opening of the college year, and other rooms were prepared for use as rapidly as possible.

For the first six weeks of the quarter all men of the University were members of the Club. This plan was adopted in order to allow all University men to become thoroughly acquainted with the Club and its advantages. At the end of the first term of the quarter men who desired to continue their membership were required to pay dues of one dollar for the balance of the quarter. The regular quarterly membership fee is $2.

On November 13, 1903, the first Club election was held to choose officers to serve until the time for the regular annual election on the first Friday in March. The officers chosen at that time were: President, Howard J. Sloan; Vice President, Oliver B. Wyman; Secretary, Roy Dee Keehn; Treasurer, Leon Patteson Lewis; Librarian, Frederic Arthur Fischel. Under the administration of these officers the Club prospered through the winter, and in March, at the annual election, officers to serve for one calendar year were chosen, unanimously, as follows: President, Roy Dee Keehn; Vice-President, James Sheldon

Riley; Secretary, Harry Wilkerson Ford; Treasurer, Ernest Eugene Quantrell; Librarian, Frederic Arthur Fischel. For more than a year and a half prior to the first election of officers a special commission composed of the men on the University Councils, members of the faculties and representatives of the fraternities, houses, and student organizations, of which Dr. James Westfall Thompson was President and Forest Garfield Smith, Secretary, gave thought and labor to the details of the organization of the Club.

Article II of the constitution of the Club says that "the object of this Club shall be to promote good fellowship among the men of the University of Chicago." That the Club is abundantly fulfilling its purpose no one can doubt. The membership of the Club has approximated to 400 all year, and the unifying influence which it has exerted on the life and activities of Chicago men has been marked. It has indeed worked an entire readjustment in the relations of University men. The billiard and pool room, bowling alleys, library, card rooms, pianos and theatre furnish ample means of entertainment for all members. But the Club is a luxury as well as a place to be used for entertainment in vacation hours. There is no more beautiful or more perfectly appointed Club in Chicago than the Reynolds Club and its members justly feel proud of it. The Club works its greatest good as a "rallying center" for University men. Graduates and undergraduates feel that at last there is an abode at the University where a welcome constantly awaits them—a welcome with a roof and companionship no matter when they come.

The building and its privileges are the gift of the late Joseph Reynolds through his executor, Mr. Joy Morton. The simple and effectual way to make the Club prosper is for graduates and undergraduates to become members at once and use the Club House as much as they can. All men who are students in the University in residence are eligible to active membership in the Club. Any officer of the University or former member thereof, whether resident in Chicago or not, is eligible to associate membership, enjoying thereby all the privileges of an active member, except those of voting and holding office.

The Divinity School—A Review

To the Students of the Divinity School, the past year has been one of marked activity. Among other needs of improvement early recognized, was the practical application of principles and theories of the class-room, to the actual conditions existing in the world. A desire to meet this need was the topic of many a private conversation and stimulated in a signal way, by reports brought back from the Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the theological schools of this country and Canada, held at Rochester in November. The three delegates sent to this Convention by our school returned with new enthusiasm and with a number of practical plans. The materializing of some of these plans and their success may be noted among the organized activities of the Divinity School during the past year.

The social life of the men has been stimulated by receptions and an informal reception to all Divinity Students held in South Divinity Hall. The crowning event of the social season, however, was the Twentieth Annual Inter-Seminary Banquet held this year (April 7th) at the University of Chicago. The schools represented were Garrett Biblical Institute, McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago Theological Seminary, and the University of Chicago Divinity School. This was a pleasant introduction for many to Hutchinson Hall, the 270 professors, the Reynolds Club House, Mandel Hall, and the real "Chicago Spirit."

The Devotional Committee, during the Summer Quarter, arranged a plan for devotional meetings that has been carried out, with encouraging success, during the year. This plan embraces two house prayermeetings in the two Divinity Halls on Tuesday evening, the regular Divinity Chapel on Wednesday morning, and a student devotional meeting in Haskell on Thursday morning. Friday morning has been reserved as sacred to football rallies and "sings." So far as has been learned, both the prayermeetings and the rallies have been the gainers by this plan.

Valuable experience has been gained and valuable service rendered in the work of two missions. The men of the School, under the leadership of J. H. Larson, have had charge of the Clark Street Baptist Mission three evenings of each week. Perhaps a third of the men have taken some part in this work. The Parkside Baptist Mission under the direction of Doctor Judson, the head of the Homiletics Department, has afforded a similar opportunity and has been not inaptly styled a "Homiletical Clinic."

One of the most noteworthy organizations the past year has been the Evangelistic Band. The general plan of the Band has been to go to the place selected, on Friday, holding services Friday evening and practically all day Saturday and Sunday. The results accomplished have been the highest possible endorsement of the spirit and methods of the Band. Six such trips have been made to the following places: Michigan City, Ind.; Hammond, Ind.; Beloit, Wis.; Pontiac, Ill.; Batavia, Ill., and Evansville, Wis. The services held at Michigan City, Batavia, and Evansville were union meetings of five or six churches, while those at Hammond, Beloit, and Pontiac were held in connection with the Baptist Church.

The End-Winter Devotional Conference, held the afternoon and evening of March 11th, proved a most effective and delightful means of bringing the members of the Divinity School into closer touch with one another and into a better knowledge of the various activities of the School. Besides reports of the activities already mentioned, a statement was made of the pulpit-supply work being done by Divinity men. There are thirty-eight men so employed and, from the reports of twenty-seven of these men, it has been learned that, during the preceding five months, 1,045 sermons have been preached, 2,288 visits made, 1,655 Sunday School Scholars enrolled, 272 accessions secured, $4,961.00 contributed for home expenses, and $567.00 for benevolent causes. Other special features of the conference were addresses by Dean Eri. B. Hulbert, Doctor A. K. Du Blois, Pastor of the First Baptist Church, and Dr. W. H. Laurence, Pastor of the Second Baptist Church of this city.

Taken altogether, this last year has been a most encouraging one to the Divinity men, in revealing to them possibilities of growth and work, but they hope that it is but a promise of future successes.

The Student Volunteer Band

THE Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions, founded in 1886, now reaches almost 800 institutions of higher learning in the United States and Canada.

Its objects are (1) to raise up among the students of North America a sufficient number of capable missionary candidates; (2) to help these candidates in their preparation for their life-work; and (3) to develop among the students who remain in Christian lands a sense of responsibility to sustain and reinforce the foreign missionary enterprise by intelligent sympathy and aggressive effort for the world's evangelization.

The local Volunteer Band is composed of students in the University who are members of this Movement. Any student is eligible whose "purpose is, if God permits, to become a foreign missionary." The Band this year has had seventeen members.

The Law School

When two years ago it was announced that the University of Chicago was about to found a Law School which from its beginning would rival all western schools, and in the near future closely press Harvard and Columbia for their laurels, that it should be housed in a building of classic splendor, with a library exceeding by many thousand volumes that of any other law school library in this vicinity, that its faculty would consist of men of wide repute for their learning and ability to instil in students an interest in and respect for the law, the incredulous saw the lively imagination of a press reporter constructing with few facts and much fiction a beautiful story for his paper. A very short period of time, however, has shown these same incredulous people that so far from being a fancy of the mind the Law School is a reality—a reality awakening in them wonder and admiration.

The last offspring of the University has had a rapid growth. Beginning with an enrollment of seventy-eight, it ends its second year with one hundred and thirty students. In Professors Mechem and Bigelow two very desirable additions have been made to the faculty. Professor Mechem for many years has been teaching in the University of Michigan Law School, and is known the country over as an authority and text writer, Professor Bigelow before joining a prominent law firm of Honolulu was instructor in the Harvard Law School. Mr. Swan and Mr. Eckhart have also greatly strengthened the lecture staff. The growing spirit pervades the entire school, and it is not strange that the child of a rapidly developed parent should reach such size in the space of two years. But the school is not overgrown. Its development has been substantial. It has sent out and will continue to send out men thoroughly trained and equipped to make a success in the practice of law, men who will do honor to themselves and the Law School.

Student activities have flourished as the school has progressed. Three fraternities, Phi Delta Phi, Delta Chi, and Phi Alpha Delta have strong chapters. At the beginning of the year the James P. Hall Law Club was organized for the purpose of conducting moot courts and training its members in practical legal work.

Was the location of the Law Building a chance, or is it significant that, standing as it does between the halls of men on one side and the halls of women on the other, it seems to hold its four spires heavenward in a mute plea for justice, equality, and non-segregation? Does the small entrance on the east stand as an invitation for more Portia's to become Balthasar's or is it merely to afford an avenue of escape for the weary minds of the prospective juris doctor's to soothing influence? Only the faculty know, and only the future will reveal. Meanwhile the Law School will continue to feel proud, and invite its friends to come and see it in its new home.

Love Song of an Undergrad

The Foster Girl in Green

There's no Kelly girl in Foster
And few Beecher girls are seen
In Kelly—yet I know of one
Fair Foster girl in Green.

She's in my two o'clock in Cobb,
This maid of sweet nineteen,
But even while she's sitting there,
She's none-the-less in Green.

Her name—it rhymes with chilly
(That's what she ne'er has been),
She's a charming little angel—
This Foster girl in Green.

She rooms both in Green and Foster?
No, that's not what I mean.
It's her clothes and eyes that make her
The "Foster girl in Green."

To (Grace?)

A Gargoylette

Adapted to Recent Law School History

I would I were a pirate bold,
And the campus were the sea;
I'd creep some night to Foster Hall
And sail you away with me.

You'd be captain and I the crew,
As we sailed the wind-tossed wave;
For body and soul I belong to you,
And my heart love has made your slave.

With you at the wheel we'd sail away
From the student's drudging life;
And alone we two would start anew
In the role of man and wife.

With no recitations or flunks or cons
To mar our glad career,
We'd set our helm for the "great beyond"
And sail out in peace, my dear.

Season 1903

THE football season of 1903 at the University of Chicago was interesting and exciting from the kickoff of the first big game to the call of time at the end of the first half in the Michigan game, Thanksgiving Day.

The season was not successful from the football point of view.

At times the team played brilliantly and the individual players made spectacular showings; at other times the whole team slumped and did not play 'Varsity football. Upon several occasions, however, the Maroons demonstrated that they knew the game in every detail.

But the spirit of hopefulness on the Midway campus was frequently broken by periods of gloom, caused by the poor work of the team and the severe criticism of the newspapers.

The middle of September brought back L. Maxwell, R. Maxwell, Speik, Catlin, Ellsworth, Ahlswede, Bezdek, Schnur, Ivison, Hitchcock, Gale, Kennedy and Wightman. The loss of Koehler, Sheldon and Farr was keenly felt, but Hill, Nordenholt, Parry, Eckersall and Tobin soon showed ability and the outlook was pleasing to say the least. It was generally conceded that Chicago was in the race for the flag and would make a game fight. Yost, of Michigan; Curtis, of Wisconsin, and other coaches who had arranged games with the Maroons acknowledged this fact and looked forward to the Chicago game as one of the hardest on their schedules. The first slump came with the Northwestern game. Previous to this contest the Maroons had met and easily disposed of Monmouth, Purdue, Cornell (Iowa) and Indiana. Before the Northwestern game all was confidence. Everyone predicted victory. At the mass meeting members of the team expressed themselves freely as to the size of the score. At least it was only a question of figures. The men went out on the field that day smiling, but when the whistle blew at the close of the game they returned to the gym without a word to say. Neither side had scored, but the Maroons had been outplayed. Thus settled the first shadows. However, the men showed "game" and went back to practice harder than ever. Northwestern was past; Wisconsin was coming and every man realized that the game was a crisis. While the newspapers "and others" were knocking, Mr. Stagg was working the team behind closed gates. The sun shone once more when Wisconsin was put out of the race by a score of 15 to 6. Wisconsin's subsequent tie game with Northwestern placed Chicago a notch above the latter. Woodruff's

Illini, who at the time of the Chicago game, "looked good," fought hard and for a few minutes successfully. But the individual work of a few Chicago men saved the day. Illinois was beaten 17 to 6. Almost as disappointing as the final game of the season was the defeat at the hands of West Point. Of course Chicago was handicapped by the long journey but in spite of this they outplayed the soldiers at almost every point of the game and gained three times as much ground as their opponents. Poor headwork in directing plays gave victory to the Cadets, 10 to 6. The eastern trip, however, was not entirely barren of good results. The men won the respect of the East by their clean methods, and the team was credited with playing the whitest game ever seen on the West Point gridiron. In the West Point game the men played together well and Mr. Stagg seemed satisfied that the team was at last playing steady ball. Two week's practice remained in which to round the team into perfect shape to meet Michigan who had gone through the season undefeated. All thought that the Thanksgiving Day game would be close and hard fought with a chance for either side. Reports from practice had it that the Maroons were improving and the hopes of Chicago backers rose sky-high. The papers the day before the game said it was "even betting." Michigan came, not over-confident but determined, as is shown by a remark made by one of their players: "We'll win, but don't bet on the score." The story of the game is old. No excuses are offered, but something was radically wrong.

By defeating Wisconsin, who later tied Northwestern, Chicago gained third place, Michigan and Minnesota taking first and second places. Chicago must be given credit for playing the hardest schedule. Purdue, Northwestern, Illinois, Wisconsin, West Point and Michigan form a series which will tax the best team. Individually several of the men played excellent football. Eckersall's drop kicking in the Wisconsin game was nothing short of phenomenal. The entire score was due directly to his clever foot work. Wisconsin claimed that without him the score would have been 6 to 0. But Chicago played a kicking game because it best suited the occasion. If it had been necessary they would have played straight football and won.

THE Freshman-Sophomore game was played on the afternoon of the 25th of November. It was fiercely contested through to the end, but the Sophomores had a little the best of the battle nearly all the time. The goal of the second year men was never in danger. The Sophomores, though worn out from lack of training, fought on their nerve during the second half and made a goal from placement, together with a touchdown near the end of the period. Score, 11 to 0. Had it not been for serious fumbling on the part of the victors the score would have been much larger.

Review of the Baseball Season of 1903

CHICAGO has just reason to be proud of her 1903 baseball team. Although seriously handicapped by the quality and quantity of material at hand, through the efforts of Director Stagg, Captain Harper and Assistant coach Smith, who superintended the work of the Freshman team, a nine was developed that played steady and at times, brilliant baseball, ranking third in the West. In the consideration of this team, allowance must be made both for the scarcity of material to fill the important positions and the accidents which came to mar the work of such material as there was. Not only did the rules of eligibility interfere with the success of the team, but conflict of work and accidents handicapped; at least three star men were lost through these causes. Up to the time when Ellsworth sprained his ankle, not a championship game was lost. This accident, however, weakening the pitching department as it did, seemed to take the heart out of the men and they did not recover until he was able to pitch again.

For the team of 1903, it was necessary to develop an entirely new infield and to bring the pitchers to a higher state of perfection and steadiness. The natural fielding strength of the team had to be taken advantage of, the batting average raised, and the pitcher's box filled from a supply of mediocre and erratic candidates. That the object sought for was accomplished is shown by the fact that Illinois, the team that later won the championship, was able to beat Chicago, on her own field, only by a hard struggle of ten innings and a score of 4 to 3; by the defeat of Northwestern in three games, one lasting eleven innings and another ten, and by the series of three straight games taken from Wisconsin. Michigan succeeded in capturing their series by winning two out of three games. The series with Illinois was not completed. For the first time in the history of the University, Chicago's team failed to appear for a contest, being misled by a change in the time table and missing the train to Champaign. The mistake was an unfortunate one, as a victory would have decidedly helped the percentage column of either team.

In 1903, for the first time, a league schedule was adopted. A series of three games with all the other members of the league, was arranged for each team, and that team winning the largest percentage of games, was declared champion. Illinois, Michigan, Chicago, Wisconsin and Northwestern finished the season in the order named.

With the loss of only two men, Captain Harper and Roy Merrifield and the acquisition of a wealth of promising material, especially in the vital department of all, the pitcher's box, Chicago is justified in considering herself a strong aspirant for honors in 1904.

Intercollegiate Baseball League

The following Universities decided to arrange a series of three games with one another to determine the championship of the West.

	WON	LOST
Illinois	10	1
Michigan	8	3
Chicago	7	4
Wisconsin	2	9
Northwestern	1	11

One game between Wisconsin and Michigan was not played on account of rain. Northwestern forfeited one game to Michigan. Illinois was given one game with Wisconsin by the umpire on account of Wisconsin's leaving the field. Chicago failed to play one game with Illinois on account of a change in train schedule on the day of the game.

Track Team, 1903-1904

THE University of Chicago Track Team for the season of 1903 was the most evenly balanced that has represented the University for years. The early indoor meets brought out many new candidates, from among whose number Taylor, Hall, Catlin, Kelly and Buckwalter turned out to be of true 'varsity caliber and added materially to the strength of the team. The first indoor meet held in the old gym on February 14th with the University of Illinois resulted in an easy victory for Chicago the score being 60 to 26. The only remarkable performance of the meet was the mile run which was won by Fred Hall in the wonderful time of 4.36, breaking the track record by ten seconds. On February 21st Wisconsin came and went home defeated by a score of 49 to 28. Hall was again the star performer of the meet for after lapping the Wisconsin men in the two mile run, he came back and ran second to Cahill in the half.

The first outdoor meet in which the University was represented took place at Philadelphia on April 25th. Besides a four mile relay team composed of Hall, Cahill, Gale and Matthews, only two men, Capt. Magee and Blair, were sent to compete in the special events. The West was well represented in this meet, Michigan, Wisconsin and Chicago all competing in the four mile relay which was won by Michigan, with Yale, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin and Chicago finishing in the order given. We might add that we defeated Harvard and Columbia. The 100 yard dash was so closely contested that it was difficult to tell who had won, but the judges awarded the race to Shick of Harvard, giving Hahn of Michigan second and Blair third. The time was 10 flat.

On May 9th we held our first outdoor dual meet with Illinois on Marshall Field. The meet was close until near the end, when Chicago, by winning most of the points in the last three events, secured a big lead, the final score being 74 to 52. The half mile race was the most closely contested event. Cahill took first place in 2:00 $\frac{3}{8}$ , but the interest of the race was in the fight for second place, Moore of Chicago nosing out Captain Herrick of Illinois at the tape by only a few inches after a sensational sprint down the stretch.

Perhaps the most disappointing meet of the season was that which took place at Ann Arbor against the University of Michigan, on May 16th. A decided slump was noticeable in almost every event; with the exception of the discus throw, the pole vault and the high hurdles, Chicago was unable to score a first place. Most of the records made in the various events were slow and unnoteworthy. The score, 83 $\frac{1}{2}$  to 42 $\frac{1}{2}$  in favor of Michigan, shows the relatively poor showing made by Chicago.

At Madison, one week later, we scored an easy victory. The sad feature of this meet was the injury sustained by Captain Magee in trying for distance in the pole vault after he had won the event. The pole broke and he fell on his shoulder with sufficient force to make it impossible for him to do his best work in the conference meet the following week. The final score was  $72\frac{1}{2}$  to  $53\frac{1}{2}$ . The Conference meet, held on Decoration Day, was in one sense the most satisfactory meet of the year. It was hard to lose by a few points after coming within winning distance, but the work in general was of a very high order. There were many surprises, the greatest, perhaps, being the work of Matthews in the mile run, who scored second place to Hearn of Purdue, over a large field of competitors. Blair succeeded in setting a new Conference record by defeating Hahn of Michigan, in the 100 yard dash in  $:09\frac{4}{5}$  seconds. Catlin's performance in both hurdles was very creditable, he won first place in both events in fast time. The weight events were the weak spots for Chicago. Speik scored the only three points in the weights by winning second in the discus throw. The final score of the meet was as follows: Michigan, 49; Chicago, 40; Wisconsin, 10.

The annual indoor championships, given under the auspices of the A. A. U., were held in Milwaukee on March 7th. The work of the team as a whole was decidedly below the average. The only redeeming feature was the performance of the relay team and the work of Cahill in the half mile, both of which events were won in "handy" fashion.

On March 14th Chicago went to Madison for its first dual meet away from home. It has always been a difficult matter to defeat Wisconsin in an indoor contest in her own gymnasium, and so in this meet Wisconsin won by a score of  $42\frac{1}{2}$  to  $34\frac{1}{2}$ . Here again Hall distinguished himself by running the two mile on a fifteen lap track in 9:56. Taylor, for the second time during the season, defeated Poage, in the quarter mile run. The time,  $:53\frac{2}{5}$ , was exceedingly fast. In the half mile run Cahill and Breikrentz of Wisconsin, ran a dead heat in the fast time of  $2:03\frac{2}{5}$ , breaking the track record.

The last indoor meet took place at Champaign, against the University of Illinois, on March 21st. Several of the Chicago men were unable to compete, and consequently the meet was much closer than the first contest. Chicago won, however, by scoring first place in the pole vault and high jump, the last two events. Our relay team was, in this meet, defeated for the first time. The final score was 45 to 41.

Cross Country Club

URING this, the third year of its existence, the interest shown by the students of the University in the work of the Cross Country Club has been more enthusiastic than ever. From the day of the first run up to the close of the season, scores showed a desire to earn the honor of wearing the three "C's," a fact which made membership in the Club, which is limited to twenty, all the more coveted. In addition to the honor offered by membership in the Club, an extra inducement was given contestants this year in the shape of the Henry Trophy Cup.

This trophy is a silver cup, presented by "Pat" Henry, sometimes known as the "Father" of cross country running at the University, and is to be awarded to the winner of a long distance race to be held each Autumn Quarter under the auspices of the Club. The winner holds the trophy for a year, and has his name engraved upon it. When its surface has been covered with names the cup will be placed in the trophy room at the gymnasium. The successful candidate this season was James D. Lightbody, who ran the distance, close to four and one-quarter miles in 22:29 3-5.

The quality of the work done by the Club has greatly improved year by year. This statement is attested by a comparison of the records made in two succeeding years. The best time made over last season's course, about three and one half miles long, was 19 minutes 24 4-5 seconds. This year's course, three-fourths of a mile longer, was run by Lightbody in the excellent time registered above. It is hoped by Mr. Stagg and the officers of the Club, that at least one hundred men will try for places next year, and help make lasting the popularity of this form of exercise.

POLO

Under the direction of Mr. Knudson, an old polo player, and without question the best swimming coach in the West, the University is developing two good water polo teams, determined to do credit to Chicago in future collegiate contests. In connection with water polo is life saving practice, instructions in rescue work and resuscitation. Mr. Knudson brings to this work skill and ability which is the result of long experience brought to a science in training a class of 100 at the Central Y. M. C. A. Chicago.

Relay teams are organized, composed of the fastest men on the squads. Mr. Knudson gives coaching in individual work for the short and long distances. Under water swimming and long distance diving are events at which men are fast becoming record breakers.

1903 BASKET BALL TEAM

Basket Ball, Season of 1904

---

FOR the first time in its history the University has had a basket ball team for membership in which a "C" was given. This year the center of the "C" supports two "B's," but next season the plan is to give a plain "C" to the men who make the team. It has been several years since the University has made any attempt to organize a basket ball five, due partly to the lack of material and partly to lack of interest in the sport. Other colleges, however, both in the West and East, go in for the game, and there is no reason why Chicago should not lead in the sport. Early in January, under the guidance of Coach Childs, twenty candidates commenced work. In a few weeks two teams were picked and regular practice three nights a week commenced. The 'Varsity Five met the leaders of each of the three high school divisions and defeated them. Although the team developed splendidly Mr. Stagg thought it best not to attempt a 'Varsity schedule, as the season was half over before the men showed championship form. Next year it is hoped that Chicago will have a team which will prove a winner.

Woman's Athletics, June 1903-1904

HE possession of a building entirely their own has given new spirit and zest to the gymnastic and athletic work of the women of the University. This building with the small adjoining field and the athletic field has given opportunity for practice and training throughout the year. In the winter quarter the annual gymnastic contest was held with fifty students entered for the different events. In the Spring the Senior-Junior College Basket Ball Teams played their annual series of games for the championship cup. College spirit was further aroused by the games of the Senior-Junior College Baseball teams for the championship banner. There were match games of Hockey though not between college teams and also the tournaments in Tennis and Golf.

The athletic activities of the Spring ended with the annual banquet given by the members of the teams in the new Lexington Hall Gymnasium. The attendance, which was much larger than in previous years, indicated the growing interest in athletics and in this annual social celebration.

Scratch, scratch, scratch

On thy worn note-book, O class;
For, imbued with the strength of a wondrous mind
You know that the course you will pass.

O the weird strange tales he has read us
In the silence of Haskell Hall,
And the transcendental theories
Expounded to us all.

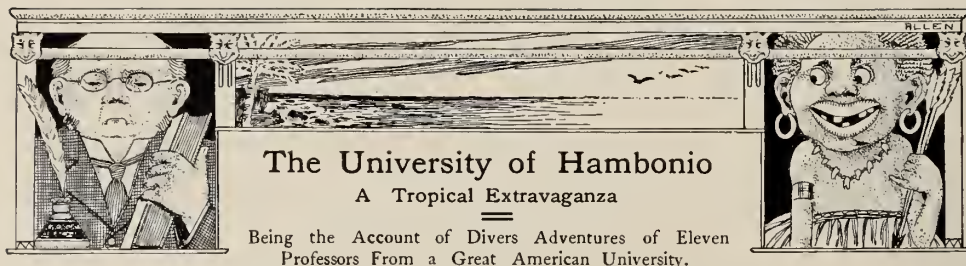

With Lanier's poetic method,
And Emerson's metaphors,
And the poems democratic
Of the Whitman he adores,—

With all this, and more, he has held us
Spellbound each day for an hour,
And our hearts were awed with wonder
By his strange dramatic power.

A JAMBOREE

Oh, the Whangdoodle played in the umberous shade
 Of a grove of sillabub trees
 On a mussel-shell harp with the fin of a carp,
 The song of the Driveling Dreese;
 And the words that he sang, with a cackling clang,
 Were the words that the Jibbawee sings
 As he skims through the air to his petrified lair,
 On his glutinous, jellified wings.

CHAPTER I

HOW ELEVEN PROFESSORS TOOK SHIP AND SAILED AWAY FROM HONG KONG

ELEVEN university professors, with long disarrangements of the alphabet after their names, and moved by the devil that sometimes prompts men to their own undoing, marched solemnly down the Shicko dock, in the very dirty harbor of Hong Kong, and deposited their handbags and sundry packages on the very outer edge. There was a banana steamer lately arrived from Iloilo, lying at the dock, and on the main hatch of the steamer sat a Kanaka islander catching fleas industriously. The eleven university professors looked at each other in a sort of dismay. There was some talk among them: "This steamer is incommensurable" . . . "and dirty" . . . "and the odor is er—annoying." The Professor of Semitic Languages and Literature, however, stood apart, eyeing the fruiterer with the eye of a headwaiter. "We will embark," he now announced to his fellow instructors and made no more of their objections.

Forthwith he called to the Kanaka, who continued to catch fleas. Finally the Kanaka looked up, his face nearly as expressive as the bulge of a copper kettle, but the fleas interested him more than the professors and they again claimed his attention.

In response to the shouts, however, the captain of the fruiterer gazed listlessly out of a fore-castle port. "This ain't no menagerie," he informed the professors, not without heat.

"Will you convey us to Honolulu?" inquired the Professor of Semitic Languages and Literature.

"Not by a darn sight," returned the captain, amused. "What am I carryin' passengers for?"

"If it is a matter of pecuniary emolument," said the professor, "you can affix the price you desire."

Now the captain was ever a man of business. Ten minutes later the Kanaka had reluctantly abandoned his chase after fleas and was carrying luggage to the cabins, while Dr. Hippocrates P. Pudger, Professor and Head of the department of Semitic Languages and Literature in a great university, accompanied by ten other professors, also heads of departments in the aforesaid university, clambered on board the Laura Watkins. The captain went out into the suburb of Kau-lung to rustle up supplies and shanghai seamen on board the Laura W., and being a persistent man, he accomplished both by midnight.

When the slant-eyed celestial opened his shop on the wharf next morning, he saw the swirl of greasy water around the fruiterer's propeller as she moved away from Shicko dock. Out through the Bashee channel the Laura Watkins chased the black-and-yellow Chinese junks, and headed away and away into the Pacific, shouldering across the big blue rollers. The air was sweet with the off-shore breeze, the gulls flew screaming about them, and eleven members of a great university faculty, returning from a touring trip through the Holy Land, hung a limp and agonized row over the rail, feebly reproaching each other for eating an early breakfast.

CHAPTER II

HOW ELEVEN PROFESSORS AND ONE KANAKA, BY NAME
LILLIBULERO, WERE CAST AWAY ON THE ISLAND OF HAMBONIO

Eleven professors came riding perilously to shore on beams and planks, with the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek perched in solitary state upon an empty hoghead. They were the passengers of the late Laura Watkins, foundered, and the lusty Pacific surf toyed with them awhile in the breakers and then cast them up on the sandy shore of the uncharted island of Hambonio. They lay, sadly draggled, regaining their breath, and then pulled each other out of reach of the waves.

Professor Pudger sat down disconsolately on a stone and wept salt tears. The shipwrecked colleagues gathered mournfully around him. "All is lost," said he, "and we are lost with it, upon this desert isle."

A wild shout interrupted him. The professors looked at each other anxiously, fearing savages, but gazing seaward they descried the Kanaka paddling triumphantly to shore in a banana-box. Professor Pudger plucked up heart at this manifestation of mercy. As one man the professors rushed down to the shore and embraced the Kanaka. "You shall be our man Friday," cried they, and the Professor of English, a half-forgotten historical ballad coming to his mind, exclaimed, "You shall be called Lillibulero."

Lillibulero's face did not glow with joy nor gratitude; no, it looked the same as usual. He tried to borrow a cigarette from the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek, failing in which he sat down beside Professor Pudger and devoted himself to an earnest contemplation of his pet sore toe.

CHAPTER III

HOW THE SHIPWRECKED PROFESSORS DISCOVERED THAT THE ISLAND OF HAMBONIO WAS INHABITED, AND CHRONICLES OF FURTHER HAPPENINGS

Professor Pudger was not a man to be long daunted by shipwrecks. He pondered on his stone in silence. Then he brightened up and said: "Fellow sufferers, we will go on a journey of discovery." So they followed him to the top of a high bank and looked around. There lay a fair, level country before them, well wooded with palms and banyans and other tropical trees, and beyond that were rolling uplands, and back of all a great hill stretched up to meet the brilliant sky. The prospect was a pleasant one, but the professors one and all turned pale, some of them screamed, perhaps, for they saw the huts of men near by and a multitude of brown figures running towards them.

It was good to see Professor Pudger's fortitude then. He turned to his companions and said: "If we die, we die in a noble cause. Let us form a hollow square, with me in middle to direct you, and withstand the enemy."

They formed the hollow square, but the brown islanders came forward palms outward. "I think" quavered the Professor of Anthropology, "I think, my dear Professor Pudger, that the sign is an expression of goodwill."

"God grant it," ejaculated Professor Pudger, involuntarily turning a trifle pale. "Are you sure? Try to remember at once."

"Yes," said the Professor of Anthropology. "I am quite sure I remember it now." And he held up his own hand tremblingly. So did all the other professors, Dr. Pudger's two chubby palms waving as valiantly as any.

The islanders approached wonderingly, examining the gallant professors with shy dark eyes, for these islanders were not ferocious in the least. In fact they carried no weapons, but spoke in a strange tongue, making signs eagerly.

Professor Pudger rose to the occasion. He addressed the Hambonians hopefully in Semitic, in Hebraic, in Arabic, and finally in Scarabaic. The other professors followed his example, bring back to life languages dead for many centuries. Together they resurrected twenty-one languages and thirty-seven dialects, but none of these evoked intelligible response from the savages. At this critical juncture in their fortunes, and while each of the eleven professors was searching in the catacombs of his brain for further patois, Lillibulero appeared upon the scene, blissfully sucking a cocoanut, which he had apparently conjured out of the atmosphere. He grunted eloquently at sight of the savages and uttered strange words. Now Lillibulero's articulation had hitherto been confined to cursing skillfully at the fleas, so the effect of his words was all the more magical to the palpitating professors. The natives surrounded them with cries of joy, and they were led toward the huts, whence appeared women and children in varying shades of color, from black and shiny patent leather to the hue of a particularly burnt gingersnap. Amid a tumult of joyous sounds the eleven professors and Lillibulero were convoyed in state to the village. It is notable that the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek kept his eyes modestly on the ground, being a singularly bashful and retiring man.

CHAPTER IV

HOW THE ELEVEN AUGUST FACULTY MEMBERS AND ONE LILLIBULERO SOJOURNED ON THE ISLAND OF HAMBONIO

The dry season was beginning in the island of Hambonio. The long creepers rustled sleepily in the forest; now and then a cocoanut fell on the beach with a soft thud; and the bright tropical birds flashed and called to each other far up in the fronds of the waving palm-trees. That was all; the island dozed away under a brilliant sky, and the big Pacific rollers came gently in from the horizon line.

Eleven members of a certain college faculty wandered around through the forests in the cool of the day, and in the burning hours took siestas in their little thatched huts. They found life a very simple thing in Hambonio. The Professor of Anthropology studied the inhabitants intermittently, taking notes on his shirt front. The Professor of English taught parts of the language to a native or two, and the other professors amused themselves according to their bent. At first they spent a great deal of time trying to meet the exigencies of their apparel with ill-conceived contrivances, but as the lazy tropical life crept into the marrow of their beings, they grew careless of tattered clothing, and soon began to discard the less needful portions. All but the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek and Dr. Pudger.

The Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek was a very modest man, as has been observed before, and the sight of so much loveliness embarrassed him. He was in a constant state of blushing, and finally forsook the society of Hambonio and devoted himself to Lillibulero. Lillibulero was having the time of his life, and already had succeeded in getting the chief to present him with three fish-bones for his hair, which, he explained to the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek, was a mark of high honor.

As for Dr. Pudger, his soul longed for action. He was used to more exciting scenes, and the tranquil calm of this island life galled upon him. He mostly sat on a rock and looked over toward Honolulu, figuring out that it was only two thousand miles away. He became taciturn, and reproved his comrades occasionally for small things. Plainly there was—not a plan, as yet—but an idea taking form in the Professor of Semitic Languages and Literature's domed head.

CHAPTER V

HOW THERE CAME THE GROWTH OF THE UNIVERSITY IDEA

Time passed. The shipwrecked professors were gradually learning the language and acquiring the habits of the islanders. The Professor of Mediaeval History began to stay out late nights, and when taxed with flirting by the Professor of Sociology, he did not resent the charge. The Professor of Sociology, himself was suspected of making dates with the daughter of the chief. Plainly they were degenerating.

They sat at their repast one morning. The talk ran on happenings in that Occident they had left so long ago. "It is about time for the Fall Convocation," said the Professor of Greek, who was a homesick man.

Now Professor Pudger had been of late strangely silent. At this he looked up, the light of a great idea beaming through his gold-rimmed spectacles. "We will found the University of Hambonio," said Professor Pudger.

It took them all aback, but in a moment the idea had gripped them. The next second they had sprung to their feet and grasped Dr. Pudger's hand warmly. "Vive the University of Hambonio!" they shouted, and the noise echoed out across the village, waking up even Lillibulero, who had not had a good night's sleep, being occupied with a courtship of his own. "Vive the University of Hambonio!"

And they fell to discussing plans eagerly. Dr. Pudger soared high above them here, for he had mapped it all out beforehand, and as he unfolded his plans the professors looked at each other with awe-struck eyes, as who should say, "To what heights does this man's ambition not aspire?"

"Kokomo, the chief," said Dr. Pudger enthusiastically, "will donate the land. The buildings will be under construction in a week, and we will open the doors of the university in two weeks. It will be a great institution—shall I say, a world-famous institution."

Here the Professor of Philosophy asked a pertinent question. "Will it be co-educational?"

Dr. Pudger debated the matter in his mind but a moment. "It will be co-educational," he announced. "And you," he continued, turning to the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek, "you will be the Dean of Women."

The Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek turned scarlet and his head hung confusedly, but even the deep respect and veneration he entertained for Dr. Pudger could not keep him, in this dire extremity, from protesting. "I-I beg your-pardon, Dr. Pudger, but I really - am - am afraid I'd better not," he stammered.

Dr. Pudger regarded him with a severely inquiring eye.

"You see," said the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek miserably, "you see, my position would necessarily involve some instruction of the - the women, and - and -"

"Enough, sir," said Dr. Pudger grimly.

CHAPTER VI

HOW THE UNIVERSITY OF HAMBONIO GREW AND PROSPERED

The University of Hambonio opened its doors for registration and instruction early in the dry season. With generous donations of land by Chief Kokomo and smaller gifts of labor and material from the headmen, the university buildings had been erected in record-breaking time, no union regulations interfering. A broad campus had been laid out and plans for future buildings drawn up. As yet the main hall alone had been completed, a long imposing structure, thatched and excellently furnished throughout in dark palm.

On the first day of registration, the islanders were afraid to enter. They remained at a safe distance and looked inquiringly at the entrance. In this predicament Dr. Pudger bethought him of Lillibulero, and soon, as Head Marshal, the latter was herding the reluctant islanders within the doors. Once in, the islanders were more afraid than before. They looked fearfully at the deans' offices—at the Junior Dean, with his eye glaring sternly about him, and trying to think of harmless swear-words, at the pallid, nervous Senior Dean, and at the Dean of Women. The Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek, blushing and very unhappy, enrolled the dusky maidens and no less dusky matrons of Hambonio on a handy piece of palm leaf. Thus, under happy auspices, and with the ubiquitous Dr. Pudger dominating all by his enthusiasm and prodigious adaptability, the University was begun.

It was a success from the start. The flower of Hambonio registered as soon as it was discovered that there was no personal hazard to be incurred in so doing and that the tuition was the merely nominal sum of three coconuts and a yard of cassia-cloth. The senior college, however, was unrepresented until Lillibulero unguardedly admitted that higher education might have its extenuating circumstances, whereupon he was registered for a major in house sanitation and a minor in ethics, he having recently evinced a predilection for borrowing the Professor of Philosophy's hat when going calling.

So the days of the first quarter went on. Day by day the university grew in numbers and with its growth came greater working out of details, better facilities, and, withal, more grants of land from old chief Kokomo. The professors seemed happy in their new-found activities, and urged on by the untiring zeal of the professor of Semitic Languages and Literatures, now President Pudger, they worked wonders among the students. All but the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek. The Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek fared not too well. He could never learn to take even a casual glance around the class-room, lest his timid eye should chance on some clingsome belle of the island, and only fear of President Pudger caused him to teach the Greek rudiments at all.

CHAPTER VII

HOW THERE ENTERED THE SEED OF DISCORD INTO THE ISLAND OF HAMBONIO

Time passed. The University of Hambonio prospered amazingly. The first Convocation, with one of the most influential headmen, Hokio, as convocation orator, took place in triumph, and the second quarter opened finely. Within a week statistics showed that the registration had increased to forty-nine and the professors were worked to the limit of their powers. Long ago Lillibulero had been forced by pressure of much work to quit making society dates, and now the new condition became more strenuous. And thus prosperously were the affairs of a great university being conducted when the seed of discord entered.

It was at a faculty meeting near the middle of the second quarter. President Pudger had lately taken to brooding again, and the professors knew that some revolutionary idea was forming itself in his brain. And suddenly this afternoon he looked up from his meditations, the old familiar light of a great idea beaming through his gold-rimmed spectacles.

"We will institute Segregation," said President Pudger.

At this there arose a tumult of voices, as each of the eleven professors gave vent to his opinion. Some approved, but the majority disapproved. Among the latter was the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek. Finally he raised his voice in protest, knowing well what Segregation would do to him, the Dean of Women.

But all unavailing. President Pudger was adamant. "Segregation is the idea of the twentieth century," he said. "It alone is needed to round out the University of Hambonio."

The Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek once more spoke with futile bitterness. "The men won't stand for it," he said, rebelliously.

President Pudger snorted. "The men will have to stand for it," he answered sternly.

Nevertheless the seed of discord was sown on the island of Hambonio.

CHAPTER VIII

HOW THE IDEA OF SEGREGATION DID NOT APPEAL TO THE ISLANDERS OF HAMBONIO

It fell like a thunderbolt upon the student body. Segregation! And immediately there were things happening.

President Pudger announced it in chapel one morning: "After tomorrow the women will be instructed in Hokio Hall and the men in Kokomo Hall."

The dark-skinned women of the student-body instantly began to pout; they did not like the idea of being in a room where there were no men to throw banana peelings at, or perchance kisses, when the instructor's back was turned. And the men looked no less disapproving. Forty-nine rubber-shoe faces assumed a waiting expression, and after chapel forty-nine students cut classes to discuss the hated innovation. They discussed it all that day, and that night all Hambonio discussed it over its supper of breadfruit and cocoa-milk. It was plain that trouble was brewing.

President Pudger overslept next morning, and being of late grown quite stout, he did not hurry himself. When he finally arrived at Kokomo Hall he saw a grievous sight. The students were gathered in open rebellion. There stood a great crowd out in front of the Hall, and the women were in the middle. Around them were grouped the male students, and around these there was a ring of the influential citizens of the town, headmen, and in front of all Chief Kokomo.

The ten professors stood irresolutely inside the door of the Hall. They now, in great apparent relief, hurried out to meet President Pudger. "They won't segregate," cried the Professor of Anthropology.

President Pudger's figure dilated. "They shall segregate," he said grimly, glaring righteously about him. "Where is Lillibulero?"

Lillibulero was not in evidence. In fact, he was at this moment surveying the excited faculty from the top of a near-by banyan tree, whence he had retired, providently foreseeing a difficulty.

President Pudger was a man accustomed to be obeyed. He stalked toward the crowd of silent islanders. "Segregate!" he thundered.

They did not segregate. They stood still. One or two of them squinted toward the top of Lillibulero's banyan tree.

"Segregate!" thundered President Pudger again, and, anger getting the upper hand of him, he chortled impotently.

It was a fatal mistake to chortle. The islanders rushed upon him with wild yells and much brandishing of knives and warclubs. President Pudger cast one long look at them, a look that should have stopped anything on the island, but it did not stop the unsegregated horde.

Then the eleven professors incontinently fled for the beach. They ran as they had never run before, helped on amazingly by the whoops behind them. President Pudger set the pace, and his chubby calves twinkled over the ground at a surprising rate. One by one, gasping and exhausted, they reached the shore. Then all was nearly lost, and the professors no doubt would have perished miserably, but at this moment they perceived a ship's boat drawn up in a cove near them, and from it a half-dozen sailors rushing to their aid. Out a cable's length from shore a large ship swung at anchor.

At sight of the sailors the bloodthirsty Hambonians stopped short. After all they did not look so bloodthirsty. There was old Chief Kokomo, smiling broadly, and the headmen, Cholla, and Buldillo, and Hokio, and there, too, were the laughing girls who had objected to segregation with such fatal results. They smiled amicable smiles and called out that it was a joke; a joke—because the women did not wish to be separated from their lovers.

But it was too late then. The iron had entered President Pudger's soul. It had entered the souls of the ten professors, and though the islanders promised to be good again, the eleven faculty members refused to go back. Perhaps there was in the depths of their breasts a vivid remembrance of the way those smiling chiefs and headmen had chased them over the campus and down to the beach.

Professor Pudger stood up and looked Hambonio square in the eye. "You may go," he said, striving to master his emotions, "You may go to the Demnition Bowwows!"

Lillibulero appeared from his banyan tree and explained it all to the sailors, the professors being too sad at heart, and the sailors laughed immoderately. Then the sailors got some water from a spring and rowed off to their ship, promising to come back for the professors. For the professors were going. They were to leave a great work unfinished, but they were ready to stand by their once-proclaimed principle of Segregation.

CHAPTER IX

HOW ELEVEN PROFESSORS TOOK SHIP AND SAILED AWAY FROM THE ISLAND OF HAMBONIO

The professors gave their last farewells. The Professor of Sociology and the Professor of History took two hours and all the secluded island paths to say theirs, and other of the faculty were likewise unaccountably engaged. President Pudger shook hands solemnly all round; he was visibly affected at the parting with old Chief Kokomo, who in truth had been a great friend to him, and a generous donor to the university besides.

And now, when everything else was ready, came the wonder of it all—the Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek had disappeared. They made search for him vigorously, and at length they found him. The Professor of Biblical and Patristic Greek, the singularly modest and retiring man of books and learning, was taking his leave of the chief's daughter, and he was totally unaware of the lapse of time. But finally with a slow and faltering step and downcast mien he returned to the strand, and the eleven professors were rowed on board the ship.

The ship weighed anchor. The breeze caught her sails and she headed away toward Honolulu, two thousand miles across her bows.

The professors leaned over the ship's rail. They saw the islanders become more and more faint and the island itself sink slowly into the blue distance. The setting sun shown on the distant, rolling uplands; it shone, too, on the roofs of the distant university buildings, as eleven professors sailed away from the island of Hambonio.

Help Thou My Unbelief

(Scene: It is early morning in the grove before Sinai Temple in Zion City. Beyond the wood, one can see rolling fields of grain, and the little village with its new, half-finished, ugly houses. Far to the east is a stretch of white sand and Lake Michigan like a purple and white band against the blue of the sky. A woman, leading a child, enters the grove and finding a log near the pathway to the Temple she seats herself upon it, the child flinging himself at her feet, with his head in her lap. The woman is young and delicately pretty, with wonderful eyes and a beautiful mouth; the child is like her, except that his eyes are void either of joy or sorrow. Both are dressed poorly but with great care.)

The Child: Is this it, Mother, truly? Is this the Temple?

The Mother: Yes, dear.

The Child: He will come by here?

The Mother: Yes, dear.

The Child (clapping his hands): Mother, I wish the time were now! I wish that he were here, Mother!

The Mother (looking at the boy anxiously, her eyes wide with sorrow): You must not hope too much, darling.

The Child (surprise and fear in his voice): Why not, Mother? Isn't it true?

The Mother (eagerly): Oh yes, Boy, yes! Of course. You must believe it. —Perhaps your belief will make up for my doubt.

The Child: What did you say, Mother?

The Mother: Nothing, Boy,

The Child: How long now, Mother?

The Mother: Half-an-hour.

(A bobolink sings.)

The Child (gaily): What was that, Mother?

The Mother: A bobolink. He's swinging on a marsh-grass near us, up and down, up and down.

The Child: How does it look here, Mother?

The Mother: It is very beautiful. The trees are big and tall. Can't you hear them whispering together, Boy? The sunlight pushes through them like a happy face. So beautiful! And the grass is all covered with daisies, and lady-slippers like those you found on the way from the train.

The Child. And the Temple, Mother? Is it beautiful, too?

The Mother (looking at the great, ugly structure, bleakly white even in the morning mist, with its little peering windows): Yes, darling.

The Child: Oh, I wish that I might see it, Mother! Can I?

The Mother (firmly): Yes, dear. I pray so.

The Child (with infinite longing): Can I see the birds? And the wood? And the train? Do you 'spose I can see the train? How long will it be now?

The Mother: Ten minutes.

The Child: How you shake, Mother! Are you cold?

The Mother: It's the wind, I think, Boy. It's a little chilly. I see a new flower, dear. I'll get it for you.

(The mother rises and walks away, her hands knotted together.)

The Mother (softly to herself): If I only have faith enough! He said if I only have faith enough!

(She stands a moment as if in prayer; and the doubt in her face changes to hope; the hope to glad conviction.)

The Child: Mother, Dr. Marsh said that only God could cure me. Is Dowie God?

(The mother stands motionless; her face fixed and white. There is a sound of the clinking of harness and the soft thud of horses' hoofs.)

The Child (springing to his feet and groping for his mother's hand): Mother!

An Informal Telegram

HERE the deuce is that man Richman?" said Jack Thompson, as he hurriedly glanced through the crowd of fellows standing near the door of Hutchinson, each of whom was looking for the man or woman whose name was marked opposite to the number "ten" on his program. "I've got this dance with Miss Rainey, whoever she is—I don't know her from a hole in the ground. Say! Wrinkles, 've you seen Steve?" he asked, as one of his friends passed him, intent on finding his own "number ten."

"Yes—he's out there in the corridor, fussing with Miss Darrow—said he was looking for you."

"All right, I'll take a look for him"—and slowly he pushed his way through the crowd which was moving toward the hall, making ready to dance what was left of a rousing two-step.

Soon he found his man, and with little ceremony, and less regard for Richman's fussing bee than he might have had, he broke in.

"Beg pardon, old man, but I think we went straight across this time, didn't we? And I haven't met Miss Rainey."

"O yes—well, Miss Darrow, then I'm to have the pleasure at the Prom?"

"Thank you, Mr. Richman, if you care to," she responded, and the two started toward the door, just as Miss Darrow's tenth man put in his appearance.

"Where is she, do you know, Thompson?" said "Rich."

"How the deuce do I know—I've never met her."

"Well, she's dressed in black—with a bunch of violets that came from some dance last night. Haven't you seen her?"

"You clown—"Dressed in black, with a bunch of violets"—guess there're twenty girls here in black if there's one."

"O there she is, sitting in the fire place." And the two edged their way with the current of dancers to where she sat, comfortably watching the kaleidoscopic mass.

"Miss Rainey," said Mr. Richman, "may I present my friend Mr. Thompson. I believe you have this dance together. And say, Jack, where's Miss Wright?"

"O she's down near the platform by the orchestra. Guess she's given you up by this time." And "Old Rich," as the fellows called him hopped down the hall, unconsciously keeping time to the rhythm of the music.

When Jack and Miss Rainey were fairly under way, and he found that she could dance easily and talk at the same time, he thought he would try his hand at a "josh" or two.

"That's a great tale 'Old Rich' was handing 'round about your violets, Miss Rainey," he began.

"About my violets? Why! what's he been telling now? Mr. Richman doesn't know a thing about these violets, and what's more, he's not going to. I got them at a dance last night—or I guess it was this morning—and that's all he can learn from me. And they're fresh enough to wear tonight."

"Tonight?" inquired Jack, "what's tonight, if I may ask?"

"O nothing, only I didn't have the nerve to refuse to go to a dance with a fellow whom I don't know very well, and who probably didn't know that I've been out to dances for the last three nights, and I'm almost dead."

"Well, would you rather 'sit it out?'" said Jack, taking notice of so weary and pointed a suggestion.

"Honestly, Mr. Thompson, I'd like to dance 'cause I just love to, but if—"

"Well, of course. Let's sit out the encore, and I'll get some frappé."

And as the insatiate dancers on the floor clapped for the encore, Jack secured some of the "liquid nourishment" and went back to where Miss Rainey was sitting.

"And you're going out again tonight?" asked Jack.

"Mother doesn't want me to, and I suppose I can't help it now," she said. "I wish I could come home early, but I know the thing will last until—"

But Jack didn't hear the rest of that sentence. He was following through a train of thought that had flashed into his mind.

"That's easy!" said he after a short pause, "why! I'll just send you a telegram to come home."

"You!"

"Yes—why not?"—and he saw he would have to carry through his "bluff" as he had done in a good many other situations.

"Why,—you wouldn't dare!" she said in astonishment.

"That only shows that you don't know me, Miss Rainey—you just dare me!"

"Well, of course, I dare you. But you won't do it, just the same."

"But will you promise to go home if I send the telegram?"

"Ye'—well he's a dandy dancer, but—I'm almost dead, and—well, you won't send it anyway so I'll promise, just the same."

And thereupon he took out his pencil and jotted down her full name, "Miss Margaret Rainey. To be sent to the Beach Hotel."

"Well now let's get together on the wording," said Jack. "We don't want the fellow to catch you all unawares—you ought at least know what the thing is liable to say."

"You're only fooling—Mr. Thompson," said she, looking up at him half doubting, half making up her mind to "be game" as Jack called it.

"Don't you believe it" said Jack. "You'll get that message, if there's a porter in the Hotel to carry it to you,—I swear I'll send it. But I don't believe you'll go home, if you get it."

"Well indeed I will. But what are you going to say?"

"O,"—said Jack, carelessly, "somebody sick, or something. How would this be: 'Bad news; come home at once?'"

"That would be alright, only, if the girls saw the telegram, they'd want to know all about it the next day, and I'd get all sorts of notes of sympathy, and I don't think anybody would believe me, when I told them it was a joke."

"Well, then—"

"O, I'll tell you; how would this do:—'You are wanted at home. Come at once?' But what'll you sign it?"

"Shucks! That'll be the easiest thing I do. My name's James—'Dr. James'—Well I guess that'll help some;—does that suit you?"

"O, its fine! And I can tell mother that I'll be home early, and to leave the lights burning, so that the poor man—"

"But— Say ! who is he ? and what'll you tell him when you get home ?"

"He'll simply have to telephone for a carriage in the middle of the dance, and then I'll tell him not to come up stairs, as the noise might disturb somebody.—He'll just have to say 'goodnight' at the door of the apartment building. That's easy."

So it was agreed that if Jack should send the telegram, Miss Rainey was to leave the ball, and go home "at once." But neither of the two believed the other would do it.

That night, Jack went to the Thomas Concert. But during the intermission he found time to put his things on and step into the Hotel to send the message.

"Now will that get right off?" he inquired in his most impressive tones.

"I'm sendin' it right now, Doctor," was the reply.

An hour later a carriage drove up in great haste to the Chicago Beach Hotel, and the porter stepped in to announce it to a crowd of young people, anxiously waiting near the door.

"O Marj," said her best friend. "I do hope every thing's all right—You know we all feel dreadfully about it. Goodnight dearie.—I'm not going to sleep tonight, I'll be so worried."

The carriage door slammed, and away they flew, while Jack sat in the Auditorium, listening to "The Ride of the Valkyries."

But Jack had forgotten to find out the name of the fellow with whom Miss Rainey was to attend the dance that evening. Consequently as he sat back in his seat, listening to the music and thinking of Miss Rainey's flight from the Chicago Beach, it never entered his mind that he was depriving "Wrinkles" White, one of his most intimate friends in his fraternity, of a partner for the evening.

"Wrinkles" had been anticipating this dance with a great deal of pleasure because Miss Rainey was rather an interesting girl, of unusual beauty, and a "reg'ler" dancer, as he put it.

And it was no wonder that the next day, as Jack was telling the fellows at the fraternity house about his unusual "josh" with a pretty girl, he was startled by his friend "Wrinkles," who shouted,

"Did you send that telegram, you—"

"What ! Did you take that girl to that dance ?" returned Jack, utterly taken by surprise. "Well I'll be—"

"Well I'll tell you what you are," put in Wrinkles, "you're—"

But the remark was lost in the peals of laughter that went up from the fellows at the table.

"Well honestly, old man, the girl told me she was almost dead from dancing three nights and an afternoon in succession, and—"

"Well, you lobster, I knew that, and I was planning to sit out every other dance with her—she's almost as good to talk to as she is to dance with."

"An' anyway, Wrinkles," he put in, with a changed voice, "how'd I know that you were going to take her?"

"That didn't make any difference," replied the other, "but say, look here ! I'll tell you just what the whole business is going to cost you.—I paid ten cents to have that shirt laundered, four cents for the cuffs, a quarter for my haircut, and a dime for my shine. The carriage came to two bones, and that makes the whole thing about two and a half. Now as I look at it from where I sit, it seems to me that all you'll have to do will be to buy the tickets to The Prince of Pilsen next Saturday, and pay the bill for a supper after the show.—I don't much care where we go, but I should prefer the Auditorium, or the French room at the Victoria."

And as that was the way it looked from where all the other fellows sat, the deal was closed, "on Jack."

The Stone of Foster Hall

"HALLO there, old man, come in," cordially squeaked a voice in answer to "Big" Reiterman's knock at the door of an upper room in Hitchcock Hall.

"You're keen for comfort," Reiterman exclaimed as he shook the snow from his overcoat and stepped into the warm, dimly lighted room. "What's on for tonight, Squills?" Squills looked over his glasses quizzically as he answered, "I'm not engaged for the Senior Prom, but why aren't you there, Cap?"

"Dead broke; Bess knows it, and objects to Uncle," replied the football captain laconically as he dropped into a Morris chair in front of the open fire. "Wish I could make a small pile. You don't know of any hidden treasure around, do you?"

"I can tell you of something that would be as good," replied Squills in a suppressed voice as he looked stealthily around, and then drew a circular from his inner pocket. "Here's a private advice from our firm in New York, and I'm going to let you into the secret. Keep quiet about it as you value our friendship. I have to attend a meeting of the Antiquarian Society, but you can stay here and study the scheme. Perhaps you will have an inspiration. There's a box of cigars in the top drawer. Make yourself at home, and I'll be back by midnight. Good-bye."

After Squills had gone, Reiterman opened the circular, and was soon engrossed in its contents. It told of a famous stone which had been stolen from a temple in Assyria, and had been traced to the United States. It had been purchased by a wealthy man in Boston and placed in his home on Beacon street. After the man's death in 1815, it was found that the stone together with the rest of his fortune had been bequeathed to Harvard Museum. The case went to law, and while pending, the stone disappeared, and had not been heard of since. It was about 5 feet, 6 inches long, 2½ feet high, and 2 feet thick. It was of white stone covered with small cuneiform letters. The translation of the inscription had been lost, but it referred to the practice of burying alive maidens who had proved unfaithful to the vows of a certain society. It is believed that the society is still in existence but the meetings are secret, and the dreadful penalty attached to even telling of the existence of the society has kept it a profound mystery to the uninitiated for thousands of years.

"It will be remembered that the Rosetta Stone was for more than fifty years used as a stepping stone in a creek before it was finally rediscovered by an antiquarian. It is not necessary," concluded the editor of the pamphlet, "to remind our subscribers of the value of this ancient stone, nor to spur on efforts to find it by reminding them of the fame and pecuniary reward which await the fortunate discoverer."

As Reiterman read on, he became unconscious of the midnight oil he was burning, and lost himself completely in the story of the stone. Before long the letters in the pamphlet grew large and then hazy and blurred; and a few moments later "Big" Reiterman sat there with his head on his breast, sound asleep. The hours slipped by, faithfully tolled by the tower clock. In fact, it was about three o'clock when Reiterman was aroused by Squills, who had returned rather later than he had expected.

"'D you find it?" he asked, as Squills took off his coat.

"Find what?"

"Why that stone!"

"Stone? No—but say, what time is it?—What! Three o'clock!"

"Yes, but come on; take off your things and stay here tonight."

"Can't—Much obliged, but I've got to get back—Gad! Three o'clock! See you tomorrow—or, I mean, see you later—So long," and he hurried out of the room. Once out and thoroughly awake again, he thought to himself: "What a night for the Prom!"

The full moon was wading through puffy masses of clouds; the gargoyles on Mandel Hall were capped with grotesque peaks of snow. The rosette of the church on the opposite corner was so covered and tucked up in snow that it looked like a fluffy feathery mother hen crouched down to protect her little ones. As Reiterman walked away from the corner, he thought of his Freshman year when he used to meet Bess on her way to the Woman's Union for lunch.

"She's a trump, but I wish she'd let me spend a dollar on her once in a while. What if I am working my way through. I wonder if she went to the Prom with another fellow. If she did I'll never hear the end of it."

Thus meditating, Reiterman walked towards the Women's Halls like a "sentimental calf," as he told himself contemptuously. It was bitterly cold, and the snow creaked in tell-tale fashion as he strode along. In front of Foster, he stopped and looked up at the window whence Bess had occasionally waved her hand as he crossed the campus. The window was dark. He stepped back into the shadow to wait until the party should break up.

"They'll be back in a few minutes, and I might as well settle the matter once for all," he said to himself. "If Bess refused me to go with another fellow, it's all up between us."

The gay strains of a new two-step came faintly from the half-opened windows of the gymnasium as Reiterman stood looking moodily at the moon-brightened outlines of Foster. Suddenly it flashed over his mind that the large stone over the hall window to the left of the door had a strangely familiar appearance. Could it be, yes, it was certainly like the facsimile of the Assyrian stone. The dimensions of length and breadth were practically the same, the letters were cuneiform. The color was gray, but that might be due to Chicago smoke. "The city white hath left the earth," hummed Reiterman exultantly.

The door of Foster suddenly swung noiselessly open, and as Reiterman hugged the shadow, a train of girls in white caps and gowns came slowly down the steps. Each one carried something—a spade, a lantern, a loaf of bread or a jug of water. In the center between two white-robed girls, walked a figure in black with downcast head.

"Why, that looks like Bess, only Bess always holds her chin up," thought Reiterman as he cautiously followed the procession.

Down the Midway the girl walked silently and swiftly. Past the School of Education, and the Del Prado to Jackson Park, they held their way. Within the park they turned to the right, and skirting the Lagoon, passed the Japanese houses quaintly lifting up their fluted roofs in the moonlight, went through the Wooded Island bowing as they went to the spirits of the roses which rested lightly upon the dark bushes.

At the foot of a great willow tree, the procession halted. The girls with spades deftly removed the snow-covered turf, disclosing underneath a trap-door. When the door was lifted, a flight of steps was revealed, and down the steps slowly wended the train of girls. Reiterman followed and saw at the end of a long, narrow passage a little cell. He watched with choking horror, the figure in black bent on the floor in hopeless agony. By the dim light of the lantern, he saw the loaf of bread, and the jug of water. He heard a rumbling sound as a stone was rolled in front of the cell, and then in the darkness came the well-known voice of Bess calling his name.

He dashed forward with a cry of anguish,—and ran against a couple standing in front of Foster Hall.

“Why, Tom,” cried Bess holding out her hand from the dainty fluffiness of chiffon and soft furs, “what are you doing here at this time of the night? Let me present to you my brother. He came in today on his way as delegate from Yale to the Phi Beta Theta convention, and wanted to go to the Prom. I was awfully sorry you didn’t stay. I left a note on the Senior Rack, and telephoned and did everything, but couldn’t reach you. —Good gracious!”

“What’s the matter?” asked her brother.

“How in the world am I going to get in? I’ve forgotten my latch-key. Say, Tom, do you suppose you could arouse Marian by throwing a snowball at her window? — — — — Oh, that’s fine! She’ll be down in a minute now; she’s just turned up the lights. — — — — Here she is now. Well, good-night, I’ve had a perfectly dandy time!”

And as the girls passed through the hall, Marian whispered: “Just see how devoted that fellow is!”

Bess glanced out and saw Tom gazing fixedly at the stone above the window.

The Disciplining of Richard

"Say Carrots, what's the matter with Rich?"

The person addressed removed his long legs from the window-sill, and his pipe from his mouth, and stared at his questioner.

"Dunno. Why do you ask?"

"Why, haven't you noticed it? But, of course, you haven't noticed it, you prize package of slothfulness! Brace up and put your great mind on this problem. Rich has fallen off in his feed, is quiet as the deuce, and Halsey tells me he has missed running with the team twice lately."

"Isn't sick, is he?"

"Sick nothing, he's husky as they make 'em! No, it isn't that, he's got something on his mind, and it has to come off. You don't know anything that's happened to him, do you? Hasn't received any knock-out news from home, has he?"

Carrots laughed. "Cheer up, old fellow, it probably isn't so serious—you know what is said to happen to a young man's fancy in the spring, don't you? Maybe it's that!"

Howard groaned. "Not a girl! Anything but that! Richy simply hasn't time for that sort of thing! Why, Carrots, for the honor of the fraternity he must run his little mile in the Inter-collegiate, and not fool around with chiffon fripperies like girls!"

"Well, what can I do about it? Can't lock Richy up! Perhaps it isn't that at all! That was merely a long shot of mine. I haven't seen Rich with any particular dame. You'll be spoiling your wise white brow with those nasty corrugations, my lad, and this trouble may all be centered in your own brain."

Howard surveyed the cheerful countenance, surmounted by the mop of red hair. "Carrots, you ought to be hung," he said dispassionately, "you're no earthly use! May I trouble you to keep a weather eye out for our handsome lad? He must be kept up to the mark somehow!" and Howard frowned darkly.

"Oh, very well, Atlas!" Carrots leaned so far back to laugh at his own exquisite wit and Howard's gloomy face that the long-suffering chair could bear it no longer, took its revenge and upset. Howard escaped during this commotion and strolled slowly towards the campus, his thoughts occupied with Richy's inexplicable behavior. The afternoon was perfect. The trees on the Midway were a mist of budding green. The spring sun shone down warmly and the young April breeze invited him to follow it in its vagrant, alluring course. Half a dozen scantily clad figures flashed by him, the "cross-country's" out for their daily run. Howard looked after them. "Rich wasn't among them, I wonder where he is keeping himself!" he thought. The grass under the trees near Cobb looked inviting and he flung himself down for a quiet smoke. Suddenly his eye caught sight of two figures walking slowly, very slowly, towards the women's halls. "That tall one in gray was Richy all right, but who was the girl?" He scrutinized more closely the slender figure in the tan jacket and saucy little toque. "I believe that's Miss Fulton! She lives in Foster. Now what is Rich doing with her, when he should be out with the team?" Howard got up and sauntered carelessly after them. He saw them pause at the steps of Foster, saw Rich reluctantly relinquish some books and a package,

WEST and NORTHWEST

LINE

There is no train service in the West more complete in every particular than that of The North-Western Line.

It reaches all important commercial centers and tourist points.

It includes such trains as The Overland Limited, a solid through train between Chicago and the Pacific Coast; The North-Western Limited, between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis; and The Colorado Special, between Chicago and Denver. This service is so far reaching and complete that the North-Western's time tables contain full information as to train schedules and equipment between more than seventeen hundred western cities and towns, with a tributary population of over seven millions, making this publication a veritable handbook of travel in the Great West and Northwest.

One-way and round-trip reduced rates in effect daily to various points.

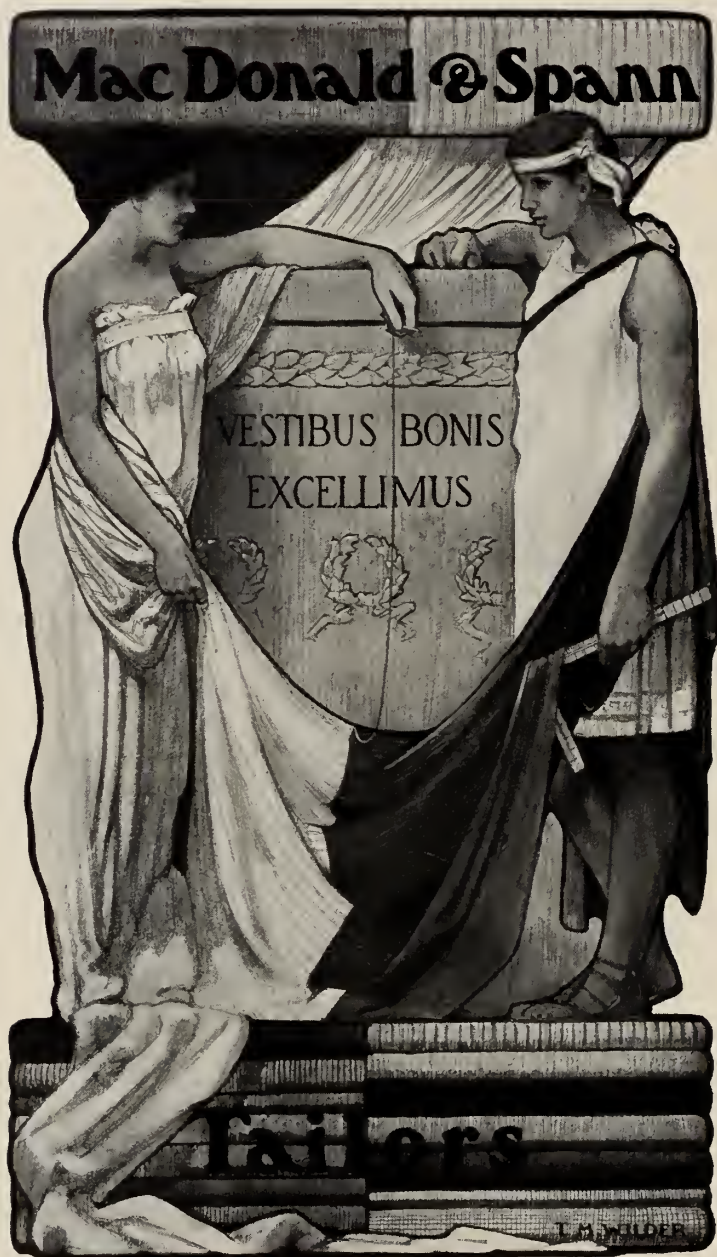

This train service includes five trains a day between Chicago and Omaha, four trains a day between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis, three trains a day between Chicago and the Pacific Coast, two between Chicago and Denver, two between Chicago and Portland, four between Chicago and Sioux City, one between Chicago and the Black Hills and numerous daily trains to all points in Northern Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Northern Michigan, Minnesota and the Dakotas.

and after a few moments take his lingering departure. Howard quickened his pace. "Now I'll just tell Richy what I think of this," he muttered. "He needs some fatherly chastening, that's a cinch!" Then he slowed again. "Pshaw, Rich would get sore and call me a Buttinsky, which I am, I suppose, Oh Lord!" Howard groaned dismally. "If that Fulton girl keeps Rich out of the game she ought to get thirty years! I must do something!"

He thrust his hands deep into his trousers pockets, pulled his hat over his eyes and walked on for some time utterly oblivious to the beauty of the new-born Spring. Suddenly he looked up and a half-sheepish grin spread over his face. "I've only met her around at dances, and she'll certainly think I have my nerve," he said, "but I'll risk it, for Richy's sake and the honor of the fraternity." * * * *

The next evening Miss Fulton was lounging on her couch, holding forth to a sympathetic listener.

"You see, Peggy, he is a dear boy, but so very young! He is delightfully teachable, however, and I know it's going to be a perfect joy to train him in the way he should go. Now, for instance, the first time I met him he had on the most awful concoction in the way of"—a knock at the door interrupted the monologue—"a necktie I ever saw," she concluded—"Come in!"

The maid handed her a card. Katharine glanced at it, lifted her pretty eyebrows, then looked at the maid.

"Are you sure he asked for me, Mary?"

"Shure Oi am, Miss. He said 'Miss Fulton' real loud-like, but he may not have known what he wanted himsilf, for he looked koind o' confused after he'd sid it!" Katharine looked dignified.

"Tell Mr. Pelham I'll be down in a moment," she said, and as the door closed flung herself into a chair. "Peggy Taylor, gaze on that card! What do you suppose this means? Howard Pelham! Why, he's never even so much as asked to call before! I have humbly contented myself with the undergrads of his fraternity and not dared to lift mine eyes towards the great Pelham, the brilliant law student, the arbiter elegantiarum who has won so many laurels, both athletically and otherwise, that if he put 'em all on he'd look like 'Birnam Wood coming to Dunsinane,' or whatever the thing is!" Katharine sobered suddenly. "But I don't suppose I need to get so elated yet! He's probably come to ask me to do some settlement work or something just as unexciting."

"Well, hurry and go down, you goose, or he'll go away without asking you anything."

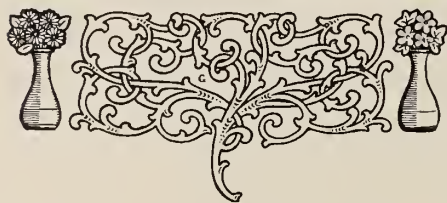

"Oh, why didn't I put on my blue dress this evening, I look so much better in it," Katharine wailed, surveying herself discontentedly in the glass.

"Never mind, you look all right, go on, and come into my room later for the post-mortem!" and Katharine went.

Two hours later she rushed into Peggy's room with flushed cheeks and gray eyes black with excitement.

"Peggy, he offered no explanation whatever of his weird conduct, but he was awfully nice, and did his share of the talking, thank goodness! Most men seem to think that they have exerted themselves sufficiently by merely calling on a girl, and leave her to do all the work after they get there. I wasn't half so fussed as I expected to be in the presence of such greatness, and best and most surprising of all, he has asked me to the Theta Chi informal next week. You know, I rather thought Richy Gordon would ask me, but naturally I accepted Mr. Pelham's invitation without wasting too much thought on poor Richy. As I was telling you, he is a dear boy, but—" and she departed.

Howard swung home along the Midway with a satisfied smile on his face. "Good work, so far," he reflected. "It's not going to be as fierce as I anticipated. She's not a bad talker, and she has great eyes, and—Sheer Luck Holmes! I discovered she has a class at three every afternoon, so that explains Rich's absence from practice at four. Walks home with her, does he, huh!" and Howard whistled softly.

Two days later an impatient youth was watching Cobb clock, the hands of which pointed to five minutes past four. There was a tap of heels on the stairs and a girl rounded the curve of the first landing. The youth's face brightened and he started forward, but—where on earth had he started from? At the foot of the stairs appeared a determined-looking young man, who greeted Miss Fulton, took possession of her books and walked off with her before the astonished Rich, who had waited twenty minutes for this very privilege, could speak or move. He watched their retreating forms in gloomy silence, said something decided, under his breath, and hurried off in the direction of the gym. The next day Miss Fulton walked home alone.

As the days went on, Howard's elation increased. He watched Rich with a lynx eye and was satisfied by perceiving that he ran with the team regularly, trained hard, and ceased his excursions towards Foster. His manner was somewhat short to Howard, but, the latter philosophically reflected, that was part of the game and Rich would thank him later. Meanwhile he was enjoying himself. The maids at Foster grew to know him, and Miss Fulton's mirror displayed various ornate decorations made by his numerous cards. Katharine responded little to the good-natured, sometimes a trifle envious chaffing of the girls on her "latest," but she spent many dreamy hours looking out from her window on the Midway, while the voices of the tennis players came unheeded to her ears, and the soft Spring air caressed her face and whispered to her sweet, vague promises. The thought of the swiftly coming Summer brought a quick pain to her heart, Howard graduated in June—and then? She didn't wish to look forward, but gathered her rosebuds as they bloomed for her, day by day. * * * *

One May evening Howard entered his room, shut the door, put out the light, took off his coat, lit his pipe, and put his feet on the table, all sure signs that an unusually thoughtful session was to ensue. The Junior Prom, the last dance of his college days, loomed large in the near future, and he had—almost—asked Miss Fulton the evening before, to go with him. Something, he knew not what, had restrained him, and tonight he intended to look at things squarely, and separate his real feelings from the bundle of emotions he had experienced during the past few weeks. Just why did his feet lead him so frequently in the direction of Foster? What particular attraction lay for him inside those gray walls? In short, what the deuce was the matter with him? Rich could serve as an excuse no longer, for Howard's plan had worked to perfection. Rich had "cut out girls" and won second place in the Inter-collegiate, thus adding another to the list of athletic glories for which the old fraternity was famous. "Brace up, old fellow," he soliloquized, "don't let yourself be knocked silly by a pretty face! It's not by any means the first you've seen, and probably won't be the last. Miss Fulton is a jolly, sweet little girl, and that's all." Howard knocked the ashes from his pipe impatiently. "For Heaven's sake, have you come through six years of college life untouched to be floored in less than two months by a girl with nothing particular about her but a lively line of talk? Now, this can't be—the real thing. You will be going away from here soon, and, of course, you'll forget all about her—after a while. Now, this Prom business, for instance. Don't ask her! There are a lot of other girls you have known much longer and have far more reason to ask than her. I'll tell you what I'll do, by jove! I'll ask my sister. She will be home from school then and will be tickled to death to come up here. She's been teasing me to bring her ever since I had her at the Senior Prom three years ago. I'll write to her tonight—no, tomorrow—tomorrow is time enough. You've had enough and too much of this nonsense, my dear friend, and you're going to cut it out right here and now." A thundering knock, or rather kick, at the door broke rudely in upon his meditations.

"What ails thee, gentle squire?" yelled Carrots, with another kick. "Haste thee and join us in our gladsome revels! Come out of it, my man, come out of it!"

Howard opened the door. "Sure," he said, "what's up?"

The next morning he met Katharine on the campus, as she was returning from the tennis courts. She looked cool and fresh in her white suit, though her soft hair was ruffled, and her cheeks a deep pink from her recent exertions, and the smile with which she greeted him showed the pretty dimples in her cheeks and chin. He straightway asked her for the Prom, and spent the next half-hour thoughtfully tearing into neat, exact, squares, a letter he had written earlier.

Everybody pronounced the Prom that year a decided success. The decorations, the music, the supper, the floor, were just right. Two of the many dancers would have been just as happy, however, if the music had been limited to one old fiddle, and the floor a mass of ridges and valleys. They didn't dance much, anyway. They sat at one end of the long corridor and listened—ostensibly—to the music. Katharine broke a silence of many minutes.

"But what seems so wonderful to me, Howard," she said softly, "what I don't yet understand, is how you happened to be first attracted toward me. Of course, it doesn't really matter, since—since you care now, but yet—won't you tell me how it was?"

Howard looked silently down into the big, heavily-fringed, gray eyes raised to him. Then he flushed hotly: "How could I help it?" he said.

A Freshman's Dreams

I dreamed, and lo! I sudden had a hunch
 That 'fore me spake a man who held a bunch
 Of messy things, that would have shamed dark hell,
 "I am the Common's steward, and this is lunch."

How awful, if by some dark, devilish crooks,
 The governor should know, when, rapt, he looks
 Upon his son's last itemized account,
 The real cost of those fourteen dollar books.

I dreamed again, and saw one with his mit,
 Plunk eighteen bones to pay the deficit
 Which from the Senior Prom, 'tis said, arose.
 He hates to be a manager, I wit.

Once more I dreamed, and, lo! there stood,—ah, but
 The darksome night draws on, and some poor mut
 Barks to the twilight air his evening bark,
 And I must go to Gym or take a cut.

Egyptian Fragments

THE following series of Egyptian fragments was discovered during the excavation of the ruins of the old "gym" in preparation for the building of Mandel Hall. They were at first thought to be of no value, as they were supposed to be mere imitations. But when examined by certain teachers and students who "came here in the the Autumn of 1893," they were positively identified as the work of certain divinity students who had become so imbued with the spirit of their work that they actually thought and wrote in terms of the studies they were pursuing. The University instituted search for the divines who had executed the conceptions, but they were found to be fossilized, so that now no accurate first-hand information can be obtained concerning them. Examination of these rare works, however, led to the formation of certain theories concerning their meaning.

With the help of "The Old Man" Fragment I was identified as being the University Strong Man doing Swoboda. Fragment II represents a Ferris Wheel Seminar, a co-educational course of such great popularity that there were never less than thirty on the waiting list. Fragment III is a graphic representation of the spirit of courtship existing at the time in Beecher Hall, according to the Dean of Women. This spirit, while not positively fostered by the other halls, made some of them green with envy to such an extent that they employed all of the arts and crafts methods instituted by Madame Yale to attract the embryo D.Ds. In fact, Fragment IV has been agreed upon, after considerable discussion by the authorities, as a Foster Hall Co-ed making ready to attend a Senior Prom. It is interesting to note the similarity to modern conveniences and methods which are evidently being employed by the student. Fragment V possesses the unusual merit of well defined, accurate execution. It is beyond question a representation of the first Glee and Mandolin Club trip, which was taken on the Court of Honor. Among the most interesting details are the basket of liquid nourishment found on the uplifted stern on the gondola, the ventilated derby hat of the manager and the reclining position of the guitar player, who is apparently "all in." Fragment VI shows the first women students receiving diplomas at the hands of the President. The satisfied and hopeful expression upon the President's face shows little sign of the great change that was to come into his mind in later years in regard to segregation.

On the whole, this collection of modern Egyptian fragments is probably the most valuable of all existing relics pertaining to the early life of the University. They are at present under lock and key on the second floor of Haskell where they afford an exceedingly interesting comparison with the more ancient records of the days of the Pharaohs.
